Thread: what is the point of ratting androids?

galrov - February 16, 2019, 6:45 pm

dont really understand the point

Many reasons. One of the main is that many people use their phone as an extra security measure. Things like authenticator apps, some people will only use mobile wallets, or only used hardware wallets, so that population of people who rely on security of their device and use a mobile wallet, well...

There are many reasons people do it, not saying this justifies or that this is moral. Definitely not the type of stuff I agree with doing.

Na just kidding it's dead as fuck now. I think gold bars still sell for $2 though.

galrov - February 16, 2019, 7:26 pm

and what about spreading for it how do people spread apks?

What's the process that goes behind that? Do you utilise the clients Google play account or how does this work.

There are so many reasons. People rat to steal all sorts of information and people are always on their phones. People use their phones for all kinds of personal things even more then PCs nowadays.

You get to RAT someone's phone, you can potentially send SMS through their device without them even knowing...

By the way, are you serious??? Habbo??? Grow the fuck up.

you could bind it with another apk file
using Metasploit or if the rat you using support it and then you could just spread it as a modded application ? people love modded apks or maybe you could spread it as an app you created it that solve an issue in android that is an idea

there is a lot of ways to spread an apk all you need is be creative

Good Luck ?

Any Android RAT worth buying? Any recommendations? Reading/sending texts is ok but executing and remote installing apk's after primary RAT apk is installed is possible?

Mercury - February 18, 2019, 1:20 am

Well just as one example, say you manage to rat a crypto trader's droid. If that person uses 2-step SMS authentication you could potentially gain access to his/her exchange account. The possibilities are endless.

the point of life is to have fun and be happy. as Timon and Pumba from The Lion King said,
"hakuna matata"
