Sigma - February 19, 2019, 5:01 pm

I can not find a way to hack it using XSS, there is no way through sqli either.

f1re_w1re - February 19, 2019, 8:15 pm

Without any backend database, you wont be performing any type of SQL injection. Wix may provide input sanitation on their form fields so I am not sure how far you'll get on that regard. I am sure they can be hacked in other ways. Anything that is on the web has a potential to be hacked.

If you can make that probability so low it becomes impossible due to time constraints/processing power.

The only viable way to hack a Wix site would be to target the admin of that site and get their login credentials, then do it that way.

Your only other real option would be to hack Wix themselves, and gain access to the target site from there... which of course would be incredibly stupid and high-risk.

But i doubt that anyone here is capable of doing such nasty thing like h4x wix. Do you imagine how famous you would be. ?

HOMODIN - February 23, 2019, 5:49 am

I do believe that currently the best way to get in is with some social engineering, even tho that requires some knowledge about the target and a different skill set.

Plenty people here are capable of that. I know I could probably do it myself, so I'm sure many others here could. I've hacked much bigger targets than the likes of Wix. Still though, it'd be a risky and stupid idea.

Ramb0x - February 23, 2019, 5:55 am

Wix i doubt. If you upload a shell and root or symlink their server, huh you would be rich :)
Could you tell us what did you hack thats bigger than wix?

Uh... idk where to start?

Facebook, US Department of Justice, European Union Court Systems, NATO, NASA, MI5 (UK Secret Intelligence Service), UK Ministry of Defense, Australian Government (every aus gov agency), United Nations, Panasonic, Comcast, Time Warner Cable, various banks and financial institutions... uh, the list goes on. Way too many things to mention tbh, but many many targets that are definitely more secure than Wix.

Yet you're still mocking people for searching for it in 2019? Consider the following scenario:
You have pre-auth XSS in a site

You have prior knowledge of their admin panel (let's say its a well-known CMS)

You know SQLi exists in the admin panel

You craft a payload using fetch(); via the XSS to navigate to the SQLi URL

Now you've exploited an otherwise unreachable SQLi and turned XSS into SQLi

Your $500 bug is now worth more like $10,000

SQLi is very common in admin areas of sites still.

Okay, literally Google "MLT hack" or something along those lines... then tell me how exactly I'm bullshitting? Are you claiming the police are bullshitting about what I did? The media are bullshitting? Everyone who witnessed it happen back in 2011 (probably before you were even around) is bullshitting?

I can literally back up all of these claims with evidence. A simple Google search will tell you I'm not bullshitting... I mean, sorry that you're incapable of these kind of things, but that doesn't mean it's the case for everyone. In case using Google is a little too challenging for you, here you go -- now please do tell me what I'm bullshitting about? The proof is right there. I can back up any claim I make and will happily do so. You're obviously pretty new to the hacking community otherwise you wouldn't even be questioning the validity of my claims.

I could show you a job I've just been head-hunted for, but why should I prove myself to you any further? I run my own company anyway, besides.. I'm making 6 figures via bug bounties. Why get a job when I can make more than enough doing bounties and running my company while being able to choose my own hours?

Also, the method I was talking about works on older distros. I didn't explain it in full detail (hence me telling him to PM me) -- it's 1day/n-day and is practically private, I wouldn't expect you to understand. I'll give you a clue though, it's a TOC/TOU race condition.

I was looking at up to 10 years but I got off lucky because I'd DBAN'd, plus I was a minor at the time.. so instead I just had to spend some time in juvie and got a formal caution for running DBAN.

absolutely they are. Just saw one in disarray and individual chose to move to custom site and away from CMS bc of two horror-stories relating to WP, then Wix. All CMS are usually because they often rely on outside developers and their plugins, tools, mods, themes, etc. More ppl involved the higher the chance someone fucks up.
