Thread: First time getting pulled over while high as a mofo

MAST3RM1ND19 - February 27, 2019, 4:12 pm

So i was at an intersection waiting for cars to pass so i could get onto the main road and a cop drive past both staring directly at me and a mate because i had a passenger in the car aswell and then i finally went onto the main road, 100 metres up the cop was stopped at a uturn section waiting thinking hes gonna do a uturn when really theirs no cars so he could of just went but it was for me to go past and my mates like hes gonna pull you over and all of a sudden sirens on boom their it was! My mate asked why did you pull us over and he's like just had a "hunch". Gave them my license and he said both of yous step out and sit on the curb. As cars was going past us you can imagine the stairs like they have never seen someone get pulled over before sooo we got searched me and my mate due to the car smelling like weed found nothing and then searched my whole car and found 1 knife and hes like why do you have this and im like "self defence never know what can happen" but i wasnt gonna get away with it anyway with any excuse but luckily he found only 1 and not the other one. In the end nothing happened no fines nothing he said get rid of it and piss off! Iv'e actually been lucky like this 4 times before but without getting pulled over high. I wasnt nervous suprisingly my heart usually beats 3x faster. I stayed quite as i couldn't talk that's how cooked i was. Life lesson hide any illegal shit in the car and don't get caught, I was lucky i was looking at a massive fine but they said "Don't ever use that excuse!" "Don't ever say that" If it was another cop you're fucked

Mercury - February 27, 2019, 4:20 pm

I don't know where you're from, but in the US he could have busted your ass as soon as you told him the knife was for self defense. That is, unless you have a concealed weapons permit. Always use the most logical excuse. "Cutting things".

Silent Uprising - February 27, 2019, 4:24 pm

I ran from the police on foot with some mates. Hide for like 2 hours. And then got pulled over like 10 minutes after we got in his car that had hella kush. It was like 4 or 5 am and the cop kept spooking us saying DON'T LIE... DO YOU HAVE ANYTHING IN THE CAR? Etc...Well he wasn't yelling he was pretty cool (there was 2 of em). We were nice back. and we got away scotch free (it was for a headlight something idr)

At least you got lucky. I managed to get away once after my first time doing cocaine. The drug hit when I looked into the cops' eyes and said "Nothing is up, sir". LOL.

Cocaine - February 28, 2019, 10:51 pm

I carry a pocket knife, and they are far from illegal. You must have had a big knife or something of the sorts. Anyways, we have all been there some of us multiple times. But as you drive more and more you get less nervous and ultimately end up in less bad situations in general. Most US states haven't really figured out the whole driving high thing yet. Usually you won't get a DUI. But if you were to live in a legal state like I do, they want people driving high to fail sobriety tests. Luckily, smell and even possession isn't enough of a reason to pull anyone out of the vehicle here. As long as your 21 of course.

Strayaa - February 28, 2019, 11:31 pm

Steam - March 1, 2019, 5:14 am

I've been pulled over with a knife before. But it was a hunting knife in my backpack. Cop asked what I was doing with it (keep in mind that carrying a concealed knife is illegal). I said that I was selling it and that's why it was at the bottom of the bag.

I also had a manual weed grinder at that point (brand new, used once). He confiscated that (which could've been a charge as well) and let me keep the knife.

Sometimes you just get to catch a break, but I guess selling it is a good excuse maybe (that is, if it's worth selling, can't carry a kitchen knife and expect to use that excuse)

That also depends on the length of the knife, anything over 4 inch is illegal.

Anything under 4 inches is legal to carry. ?

But if you intend to hurt someone with it, it is considered a weapon. Self defense would not be an excuse in the extreme situation that the cops are looking for a reason to bust you.

You will not get in trouble for carrying a LEGAL weapon for self defense.... That just sounds ridiculous. If you are carrying an illegal weapon for self defense that is a different case.

Yeah of course you never what can happen on the streets here which alot dolf it is less than 4 inches it is LEGAL, check your state laws in case. I live in a state where the laws are very strict so I believe it would most likely be legal in most if not all states.

However, if it is more than 4 inches, I would get rid of it, maybe purchase one with a shorter blade or look into other means of self defense such as pepper spray.

I almost got popped with one. Any knife over four inches is usually illegal depending on the state and if it's spring assisted it's classified as a switch blade.

My point is, it's all about what you state your intentions are with said object. If you openly admit that your intended use for said knife is self defense, it can be considered a lethal weapon regardless of length.

I got pressed over a baseball bat one time. Thankfully I've always kept a ball in the car as well. Not that it matters after you specify your intentions with it being its intended purpose. It would be tough to pawn off a giant knife/switchblade on anything other than self defense, haha.

I feel your pain.

I don't think that's true at all. If I'm wrong I'll gladly admit it, but through numerous years of knife ownership and 5 mins of Googling I can't find any instances where stating a knife is being used for defensive purposes changes the law whatsoever. Your intent changes, sure, but the law when it comes to reasonably sized knives (length varies by state but the 3-4" ballpark) you seem to be fine no matter what you state you intent is (as long as your intent is legal, obv). Edit: This is in regards to concealed knives.

Your state, county, township and local police department are truly the determining factors in these "what if" situations. Knife laws are even more obfuscated than gun laws. I personally avoid the clusterfuck entirely by legally carrying guns.
