Thanks mate!

I really think you should. My most important tip would be to learn to analyze the market. Do not just blindly take trades, figure out why the market is acting like it is, read up on news, and be very aware of the market situation.

I'm so glad to hear that man. If I can inspire anyone to gather new knowledge then I've done my deed for the day.

Have you ever tried trading?

Would be cool if you'd update me on your journey. Would love to hear if you're making bank.

Hey bro, good to see you! Yeah binary options is a bit addictive, you have to have a great self control, else I wouldn't recommend starting.

You could call it gambling. The difference is that with gambling you're putting your faith in luck. I play a lot of poker which is different. But other types of gambling like roulette, black jack etc, you rely heavily on luck.

With binary option and general forex trading you can analyze the market and gain an edge over the brokers.

The broker I play at gives you the ability to choose between 30 seconds and up to +6 hours trades. So whether it's a long run is dependent on expectations and which eyes are looking at it. ?

Pretty sure binary trading isn't banned in the UK.

I live in Denmark and people has a lot of misconceptions of Binary. The ban in EU is only for the brokers.

Meaning it's not disallowed to trade binaries when living in EU, but it's disallowed for brokers within EU to offer it. Which is why most brokers are located in the middle east.

Might be wrong about the UK though, but I know we have a lot of members from the UK that's trading at onthefhouse.

Hey buddy.

<https://www.fca.org.uk/consumers/binary-options>

Here you can read about the ban.

Quote:From 2 July 2018, the European Securities and Markets Authority (ESMA) has banned firms from selling binary options to retail consumers across the EU, including the UK. The ban is for an initial three-month period however, ESMA will renew this ban, with limited exceptions (link is external)

, from 2 October 2018 for a further three months.

So the ban is only for European firms to sell binary options to retailers.

As stated most brokers (Including the one I use) Is based off-shore and therefore is not regulated under the same law.

It may or may not be a fishy company, I don't care. Only thing I care about is getting my money withdrawals which I and anyone else I've been talking to has never had a problem with.

They even have an option to pay out in BTC which is pretty nice.

Anyway, whether you want to try or not is totally up to you mate, but now you know.

Can't disclose that sorry. As it is a major part of the on the house analyzing method. I would be in deep trouble.

Binary options is like gambling. But where some types of gambling are blind meaning you have zero influence on your outcome, this kind is based on charts and analysis.

Unless you've got years of experience, you can't analyse much.

And it seems to me that he's staking big relative to his bank, so it's highly risky.

Perhaps if he had a lot of experience analysing markets and operated on higher timeframes with smaller stakes, it would make sense.

I am most definitely at a large profit trading. I keep my net gain rather private due to law awareness in my country regarding taxes. But without saying too much I can say that I have a large net profit.

Then it is better to refrain from trading tbh. It is not worth it if you don't have the psyche for it. It can really mess a person up if he don't know what he is doing.

Well. You can call it gambling with an edge. It's not gambling like roulette and blackjack which is random.

It is possible to analyze and see where the market is heading.

Very well done! Day-trading is a special skill you either master or fail. You are a clear master. I must say, some yell that it's all about luck and the BTC value. I beg the different.

I noticed you have EUR / USD set as default for your balance. Are you from Europe, if so. Where might that be? If you don't feel comfortable sharing this in public, you may send me a PM. No need for it, but I wonder.

Well first tip is don't trade blindly. And never trade when in a negative mood.
Also tradersway is a golden tool. Don't ever trade without it.

Yeah I'm from Denmark, Scandinavia. However I trade most currencies. It's just that EUR/USD gives me a larger yield. It has a 80% payback in contrast to some other currencies who only has 68%.

It's a mixture of luck and skill. Because you can gain an edge over the brokers if you analyze the market properly. Thanks for the comment!

Yeah, I just recently stopped. Mostly because of my studies. Also because trading ain't for everyone. With my previous gambling addiction tendencies I can feel that it is not healthy for me. I tend to go rogue when I win. Because of a mixture of adrenaline and over excitement.

I did some day-trading in the past. Crypto currencies combined with BTC holding and I must say, the profit wasn't that bad.

It's just hard to decide something which is often based on, partially of course, luck. That was the down-side for me, I didn't feel like continuing my investment if it's more of a gamble to me than master-skills.

Reading stats is fine, chasing the right coins before they increase or decrease in value is great, seeing more profit with this in less than a day than a full work-week, that is just magnificent. Again, much respect for you and have much fun in Denmark. Been there once, beautiful place to pay a visit, but I don't speak a word Danish.

That's awesome to hear! Year trading blindly can be dangerous. It is always a gamble but I like to call it a gamble with an edge. At least for me. Feel free to check out my on the house thread. See if it's something for you.

I did a lot of research about Crypto currencies trading, had a platform that automated a lot of things which made it easier to trade while I was at work. Will come back to it eventually, but for now, I have much bigger plans for the future and crypto currency isn't one of them for now. I want to take time to learn more before trading again, but I will check out your thread for sure.

Denmark has some benefits which other countries should see as an example for them. If you like, we can chat in a more private environment about personal things. I like to keep my current location for myself at this point, but I'm willing to share more with you in private. I appreciate your friendly attitude, which I respect too. Thank you.
