Sent him the bitcoin, it's confirmed 4/6 as my bitpay account shows. He's a cool guy, really hope he isn't exiting on a small amount of $, especially stealing it from a young entrepreneur like myself. He's browsing HF but yet has answered my discord or pms.

boost - March 8, 2019, 3:34 pm

Def been confirmed:

Hopefully he resolves this and sends you the funds without any issues.

I'm literally trying to buy a birthday present for my mom, I hope he wouldn't scam out when he's donated more than what he is entitled to send me alone.

He just put some method up for sale for $1000, seems like he's exit scamming.

We did this deal more recent than that. This is my first dispute, he's online browsing do we wait for a response?

BTC - March 8, 2019, 3:45 pm

Damn that's some chump change I can't see a vendor scamming for such a low amount of money.

Just be patient hopefully this is resolved

Best of luck OP, he is browsing currently so if he does not respond to the dispute soon enough then at least everyone will be aware not to do any deals with him.

I'm hoping so, I'm the nervous type of person maybe I'm rushing him, idk. Does vendor cost money to obtain that title?

I am not sure exactly the requirements but it seems as though it is given out pretty lightly. Just because a user is a Vendor I would not say that means to trust them.

Always use a middleman or escrow, it is not worth the risk even with users that are heavily reputable and have vendor title :)

oh wow that's that sorry kid.

yeah he exited on the other forum a long time ago.

BTC - March 8, 2019, 3:54 pm

Truth be told most people who have been on HF for a while and are not newer to the forum realize that in the marketplace about 80% of threads are going to be scams or will turn into an exit scam eventually. It is the sad reality but Xerotic and everyone contributing to the development ideas, have made great improvements to try to counter these issues.

Definitely on the right track, but still sometimes exit-scams happen.

I would definitely say to be patient on this one :-) Patience is a virtue, I got scammed by a user here on HackForums and eventually he gave my money back due to unfortunate circumstances for him.

Purchasing any products from non-verified, in marketplaces on forums such as this one is just asking for not getting exactly what you pay for. There are no consequences for people who mislead in their thread designs, terms of services and many false advertisements . Most of these things real registered businesses could not get away with in certain countries due to laws put in place. Obviously HF is not a monopoly with police or anything like this, so I have to say, with you being a self proclaimed entrepreneur... Why not go and do deals in person with people or goto a legitimate business? Especially for a currency exchange.'

While you'd expect an exchanger to be responsible enough to send when they say they will, this has still been a relatively short amount of time and I wouldn't panic yet. Hopefully this is a mistake on SORRIE's end and something pulled him away from the computer.

You should dox SORRIE and if he's nearby / a close plane ride pay him a visit to recover funds + expenses. It's annoying to see people scamming on a hacking forum honestly.

A good place to start is the other user's he has scammed, he just scammed someone for PayPal and probably has scammed many in the past.

Contact them all get as much info you can and start your hunt.

I seen a series like this before where some guy went all the way to asia to track down some guy who stole his phone.

I doubt it. He was selling his amazon private method, and he also had made a bragging rights post about the methods. I personally don't think the hacker would go through his post history. He also made some posts using the same words/language (if that makes sense) that he usually does, a bit before the scams went down.

It is weird though considering he has donated a lot and he recently purchased Trappy's twitter cracker for $200, so how exactly would he even profit from this?

Realistically awards don't matter when you're in the hole for some money and need to come up with it quickly. Maybe he ran out of things to sell, maybe he felt like this is the most valuable thing he can do with his account at this point. I don't care to speculate as to why he scammed, but just because he has awards doesn't mean anything.

No, SORRIE didn't hack anyone, he was pretending to be hacked. He didn't actually rat anyone it was the SORRIE himself pretending to be the "hacker" that ratted this account and multiple others. Nobody was actually ratted, and it was just himself pretending to hack his own account.

Probably wanted to pretend it was a hacker to avoid backlash and prevent anyone from going after him.

BTW - I'm sorry for your loss, I would also feel safe trading a user with a reputation like him. Sometimes it's just unpreventable.

You would either have to sue him or threaten him. You would need his address and name to sue him, but you can file a police report and provide the IP address omniscient posted. It's up to the police if they want to pursue it further, as it's going to be considered a civil matter (I think). I can guarantee if you scare him enough you would be able to retrieve your money without the need of going to a small claims court.

If I were you I definitely would not let him get away with this.

He is American and there are many databases / repositories online where you can put all personal info about people and let others know details of the scam. So then if you have his real info he can never escape it... for job opportunities .. anything.

It is very common for employers to google your name and most of these websites have very good SEO and will show up top results for direct name searches with city haha ;)
