You may want to refresh your CSS cache.

r00t is now a neon green instead of the grey. Because we removed Thread Ratings and forumdisplay was very plain I've decided to do colored username by group for lastpost and also original poster.

I hope everyone enjoys the alteration.

Wanted to be the first to say this, been waiting for this thread haha.

Amazing job! I love it!

Thank you very much!

Have been discussing this with a couple others. If this is a thread to hear opinion, I'll share mine, but if this is just an announcement then thanks for notifying us.

PerfectStorm - March 13, 2019, 11:54 am

Good job I think it looks pretty good.

Damn it Omni beat me to posting the thread :(

Pronouncer - March 13, 2019, 11:56 am

Personally i feel that the Aesthetics of the forum is going down hill with these changes.

A big factor into the growth of the forum is the Aesthetics and ergonomics. The clean layout it used to have with the Starts along with monotone colors was great and gave the forum a proffesional feel.

I understand the colors is something that some people like but it also devalues items like the sales tags.

Human psychology makes it so people are more attracted to hot colors, people with colors within that catagory within the marketplace for example will now have more clikcs than those without.

I feel as if keeping it monotone sets a better ajudgement to quality rather than people clicking based on psychology, the last thing you want is for it to end up like this

Users now with Rednames will be seeing more traction compared to vendors with darker colors.

Overall i understand the idea however ergonomically i dont think it was the best move

Deal - March 13, 2019, 11:57 am

I like the colored names.

What would make it perfect in my opinion would be if they all had the same size and font-weight. But it's really a great addition man!

Nachfolger - March 13, 2019, 11:57 am

Not sure I'm a fan yet, but I'll get used to it. I love layout changes tbh.

Thanks dad.

Yin Yang - March 13, 2019, 11:57 am

Cool stuff!

SIM-3257834 - March 13, 2019, 11:58 am

Looks like when I piss out green monster. Looks better tbh, at least for those who are r00t.

Bacardi Cola Lime - March 13, 2019, 11:59 am

I really like this change as a little bit of color is always good. On desktop it looks great, BUT on mobile, when on a subforum, they distract me and I can't concentrate to the thread title. It's probably just me and the fact that I'm not used to it.

Omniscient - March 13, 2019, 12:06 pm

Quote:Have been discussing this with a couple others. If you want opinions I'll share mine, but if this is just an announcement then thanks for notifying us.

It's different, it's maybe on first glance a bit busy looking. You definitely don't have to immediately love it but my guess is that a few days and you'll be used to it.

I tend to agree because I personally do like a monotone look but at some point it's just boring. And if you don't like this change you are really not going to like what's coming. No sparkles though, I promise I'll never do that.

And I just disabled the online list for the site. So that's not a visual problem anymore.

They all do have the same font-size. Only differences might be shadows or bold effects.

i dont care about sales. Its human psychology, the smallest of factors have a massive impact on usability.

I get that it's different and I get that change takes time to adjust to, I'm not particularly worried about that. I also understand that this ultimately won't really detract from or add to my experience here. I just have opinions on the implementation of this idea, but it really just comes down to what your taste is I suppose.

If you want to hear other's opinions on colors, here's mine. If you're already set, no worries:

Spoiler \(Click to View\)

RANF forum right now: <https://i.imgur.com/rEleHqL.png>

In my opinion we've gotten a tad too busy. This screenshot doesn't include red or orange usernames and already I feel like there's a lot going on. I get with the removal of stars that we need something new to spruce up some of our pages, and I don't think adding color is a bad idea, but have we added too much color or is it too vibrant?

I feel like some of my concern with how busy things looks is based on the color choice its self. On their own, groups look beautiful, but when we have all of these groups posting in 1 place, I'd argue it can become a bit overbearing. I think this stems from our choice of brighter, more vibrant colors, compared to what we used to have. Looking back a year or two, our previous theme with the pink admin color, I think those colors would look nicer on display as they have a flatter and less intense look to them. They don't pop out at you or distract you from any other content. Like you said, the more monotone look has always been appealing, but since progress dictates adding a bit of color here and there, I'd maybe exploring middle ground and looking at some flatter colors( <https://flatuicolors.com/palette/de>) as they give you a nice range of colors, but nothing overbearing or distracting.

Read about color psychology. There's plenty of studies on it and it's used in business marketing 24/7 by any company that is competent. Certain colors (red, for example) grabs your attention and associates feelings of power, energy, excitement etc. Red is probably the most used color in marketing.

Was mainly looking at blues, a couple of them looked decent on the forum. I really liked light purple and any of the greens as well.

I'm not really particular to anything one way or another though, just sharing what I think looks decent.

Yes, overall I do. But sometimes I have to go against my personal view for such like things Notifications which I still believe is a waste of resources but at least I don't have to read suggestions every week to add it.

And for all the complaining about rainbow HF only a few pages were altered and other than root the username colors are the same.

Not to be much of an oldfag (can I even be considered one?), but I'm really starting to think some of the changes have made the overall "home-y" feel of HackForums disappear. Maybe it's because I've been inactive for two years and just haven't gotten adjusted to the feel of things, but I miss the old HackForums... I dunno what this new popularity shit is anymore, but it feels like shit. Rep used to be a big deal on who was who, and had a prestigious effect. Now I see people just buying it with bytes (more on that too...) and it devalues the whole system, so why have it in the first place? I do like some of the market additions, but I don't really fuck with that shit so I can't speak on it a whole lot. Even small shit like the old navigation bar was leagues ahead of what is being used now. I dunno what this bytes shit is other than a rewards system for posting, and for me that's always seemed like a way to boost a starting forum and has no real point but to boost posting numbers whether it's LQ or HQ posts. I feel like we've taken a turn to be like LF or some other shit, it just doesn't feel HQ anymore... I dunno, maybe as I get back into the groove of being back it'll all just become normal again. Nonetheless I'm glad to still see Omni being Omni, top dawg.

With every change introduced, there will be those who will either embrace it or shun it based on their own personal preference.

Of course, as I read a few pages earlier, what Omni said is spot on.

No one stares at HF longer than he does - so if it is something not sitting well with the users, I'm sure he'd take it into consideration.

My own personal opinion - I love the simplistic & minimal look 9 out of 10 times but hey... after removing the thread ratings, this does bring a slight pop.

Regards, Wolf ?

I think that's a bit severe. I'm personally not loving it but I'm not hating it either. As each day goes on I'm sure I'll formulate a more solid opinion about it. I do know 100% that without thread rating the forumdisplay page was boing and plain and needed something. This was actually a less intrusive way to add a splash of dazzle to the pages without adding new elements. It also makes sense in the way you can now see the group of the member who created the thread and last post, which I believe is helpful information.

I'm a pretty adaptable dude, I haven't got an issue with the color or change itself being HF has evolved through various themes multiple times. This is surely the most colorful it has been. But I actually think the removal of the Who's Online list on Index greatly reduces visual clutter which offsets the colored usernames.

What I may do is review all the official group colors and try to make a change where the groups all have a similar color or at a similar palette.

Yea I pretty much meant that. I actually miss the "Who's Online" list to be honest, I think a similar palette may be a better idea, you know for a fact you'll have people moaning that colours are too similar and then that would mean more hassle but with palette it is more variety.

Feature suggestions:

1. Everyone asking for a new group should have their bytes halved.
2. If you are in the ub3r group and your post contains the word r00t you have a 10% chance of your bytes being halved.
3. Everytime you post you have a 0.001% chance of your bytes being halved.

And there are also some color problems with banned or blocked useres

That makes sense, Closed accounts style is almost invisible as you're referring to people that aren't welcome anymore here.

Loving the new update, Omni! ?

Mudkip - March 16, 2019, 3:11 am

Although it needs some time to get used to, the forum looks way better now, imho.

Thanks for the update.

Lookin' spiffy, hoping for a pretty red color eventually

As each day goes on I'm sure I'll formulate a more solid opinion about it. I do know 100% that without thread rating the forumdisplay page was boing and plain and needed something. This was actually a less intrusive way to add a splash of dazzle to the pages without adding new elements. It also makes sense in the way you can now see the group of the member who created the thread and last post, which I believe is helpful information.

That's because it's new and you're annoyed by it. Try to ignore it and just use the page as you need. Your eyes will focus on what you tell them to.

No more R3kt.

You may want to refresh your CSS cache.

r00t is now a neon green instead of the grey. Because we removed Thread Ratings and forumdisplay was very plain I've decided to do colored username by group for lastpost and also original poster.

I hope everyone enjoys the alteration.

hell yeah this is amazing thanks for the update Omniscient!

and look good even with r00t.

Bossk - March 18, 2019, 1:22 pm fuck, why did r00ts get neon green... neon green is cool, r00t is wacko tobacco the6ix - March 19, 2019, 12:34 am

I think it's a pretty nice touch. Good job... I really dig the green.

Nas - April 17, 2019, 12:14 pm

I know this is old news now but honestly after a month, I really enjoy the colored usernames in thread displays. It was a really good idea, it no longer looks boring.

Sir - April 17, 2019, 8:33 pm

Feel free to make mine red, yellow and green.
For da ganja.

Thanks in advance. ;)

I like how the forums isn't flooded with username colors, only a few colors actually exist which makes it clean.
