Just watch with the companies when you're on the hackerone platform. The companies like to dick people around. Be sure to read the companies in-scope & ToS in case you need to battle for the buck.

Been finding bugs on there as well a few years ago, but it's a waste of time most of the time nowadays.

Whenever a company adds a new domain/scope to the site, everyone on hackerone is focussing on the bugs within their field of expertise. Some are good at XSS, some good at SQL, some good at finding authentication vulns etc.

So there's a very small chance for you to even find any major bugs beside design issues. Back when I started with hackerone it wasn't that popular, so it was easy to find XSS vulns on tons of places. Made a few thousands with it, but right now I'm not turning back to that platform just because of the amount of time it takes you to find bugs.

You can be wasting 10 hours on finding bugs and end up with nothing or if you're lucky you find one which will get you that jackpot.

In my opinion the guy in the video is a complete retard for purchasing these kind of expensive things, such as a big ass house and cars. You don't ever want to depend on bug bounties only. So he'd be better off maintaining his normal lifestyle (yes obviously buy any dream car he wants) but not using the biggest part of his money right away.

He should've invested it.

I mean real estate would be smart but cars aren't really assets they are more on the liability end of things. The second you purchase one and drive it, it will lose value.

Roky - April 1, 2019, 1:29 pm

That's really cool. I'm subscribed to a bug bounty hunter on youtube. He uploads nice videos. They go to some events where h4ckers gather and h4ck.

DezFranky - April 13, 2019, 12:58 pm

Editing out my statement after watching the video, he's a bug hunter and actually gets bounties.

Do you think he would have made more by selling those exploits?

So far from hacker ideology. Honestly, this guy claims him as a "hacker" and just show his face for whole of Internet.

Please, Jesus marie joseph god damn holy crap.

Desgusting

Naum - May 2, 2019, 2:37 pm

I feel like instead of buying all the luxuries that he has he could instead have invested it into houses and rented them out, potentially earning more money and having a safe future.

But if he wants to live his life like this, more power to him!
