Considering that most of the idiots in higher education actually thinks like this blows my mind. Let them fail at life, you've got all the information in your hands. Yet these idiots waste time on Snapchat or posting their broke boy life on IG. Anyone who walks into University with the mindset of making money instantly should be banned from reproducing.

It's the reality, go on Reddit and post this. Rather than the educated idiots taking responsibility for their stupidity, they blame society. They blame society for no self-control and ignorance. Gee all that time wasted on dank memes or Twitter could have been used for wisely. Best believe I'm going to tell the younger generation to only go if it's free or at least start off your freshman year at community college.

Rip the sad truth. I've noticed (atleast at my university) that most of the people who do well and actually use all their resources are people that come from lower class families and/or developing countries, I feel like most of the people who had the same opportunities as me just spend all their time of Snapchat and IG like you said lol.

That is hilarious bro lmao. It is true degrees do not bring you direct success but they are essential in getting the job you want. For example you cannot be a doctor, scientist, professor or psychiatrist without a degree. Truth is no one takes you seriously when you enter the professional academic world when you do not have a degree.
