Hi, I already knew these methods, Can provide proof. I have an account with multiple transactions on it as evidence.

Purse.io and reddit already knew about. but you also stated in your thread this was not the case. Falsely claimed then he states that it's not the primary method. Giving someone a website to sell your amazon on is not a method.

I would like a refund please, this is nothing more than a flipping guide I already knew about

Thank you.

Mr Professor - March 28, 2019, 9:22 am

Reddit and purse.io are just some extra resources in the guide.

I already told you that the first method in my guide is the primary one which does everything I mentioned on my thread. Not sure why you even made this dispute?

Because you lied on your page stating purse.io and reddit wasn't a part of it, and this guide isn't worth what you're selling it for based on the information, you're literally giving people 4 websites to sell their amazon cards on. How is this a method and how is it any different from paxful or and other exchange sites lol.

So, you are disputing because of the EXTRA resources you got? You are the first one to do that, lol.

My primary method works perfectly fine and does everything which I have mentioned on my thread.

What's the problem?

You were going to bullshit me so I opened a dispute

Also no where in your guide does it mention the first website being the primary not even a method, more like redirecting like an ad

You sold an advertisement as a guide

Hack Forums - March 28, 2019, 10:30 am

I mean the seller never said you would get a refund if you already knew it lol.

From what I can understand here, he sold you a method for selling AGC cards for 80% BTC and then as an extra gave you resources to obtain the cards for a reduced price (70%-75%) for a profit of 5%-10% from each one.

This being said, you can't claim the seller lied about what the method involves as the method itself didn't involve purse.io or reddit at all.

The main method can't be refunded either as it states nowhere in the sales thread, or in the contract, that a refund would be issued if you already knew the method, and by agreeing with the contract you have agreed to all terms laid out within it. You can't play the victim when your own stupidity is to blame for buying a method you may already know, who the hell buys a method for selling AGC cards at 80% if they already sell AGC cards at 80%?!?!

Because there are possibly better ways to get higher percentages which is why I took the chance of purchasing it.

I'm highly doubtful anyone selling a money-making method would include anywhere that their method is refundable if the other party already knew about it, I am also new to hack forums whereas I used to trade on Sythe.org . This is so pathetic, did you really just say you could find the other sites with a bit of googling? Spoiler alert buddy, you can probably find just about every method/product/shopify course/dropshipping/mentoring, anything else you want with a "bit of googling."

I'll give you an example. Say I am selling a method, and it contains xxx, dropshipping, and ebay. You ask me "does this method involve ebay?"

Now this is what I can do. I can simply take out the ebay method, and say "No it does not :)"

Would you have preferred if Mr. Professor did that for you? Not like you would have had any idea. To me it seems you are disputing because:

A) They weren't extra methods as they were not advertised as extra methods within the guide.

There is no wording stating that ipayyou.io is the reason why you bought this guide and is the primary and every other method is additional. I would not call each of the websites methods. The method is going to a website and exchanging your bitcoin there. You do nothing different in each one, you signup and sell your amazon for bitcoin, it's not a unique step or hidden secret. Purse, reddit are listed as methods in his guides and not stated as additional resources, they're the same concept and he lied in his sales thread stating it's nothing to do with it.

B) I'm accusing it of being an expensive $50 google search as literally all the websites he mentions is on the first and second page of google search, it's not a valid reason to dispute, but it also points out it's public information do help my argument. Still doesn't retract that he falsely stated that this had nothing to do with purse or reddit.

Still doesn't retract that he falsely stated that this had nothing to do with purse or reddit.

You still lied in your sales thread that it had nothing to do with reddit and purse, yet they're included as part of the method. They're not "additional" methods, you sold a $50 pricetag guide telling how to sign up to these websites.

What do you mean ethics? Look at where you're at. The method works I know because I've been doing it for the past year, so I can make sales threads in ebooks and lie to the customer and we're a okay?

Jesus Christ.

I'm so sorry for giving you EXTRA info which I didn't promise. Feel free to ignore the extra info in my ebook and use the main method. Your problem is fucking solved.

Is that too difficult for you?

Regarding to the price concern: If you feel that the price is too high, you shouldn't have bought it in the first place. I delivered what I promised.

You are being like a patient who went to the dentist for a teeth-fix, the dentist did it in 2 minutes and you are angry because he did it too fast. You would be satisfied if it took 1 hour. But, 2 minutes for $50? THAT'S NOT JUSTIFIED, right?

The info wasn't extra, no where in the guide was it outlined in the guide that the other 3 websites ontop of the first website you're advertising that these were additional resources to sell your bitcoin. They are all listed as method's in your guide, which all lead to the same point. Go to website and sell it. They all fit the same purpose. The main method is not advertised as a main method in your guide, the first website does the same thing as all the other websites mentioned.

So far you have shown that you do not like the guide post-purchase. I will elaborate, you do not like how it is referred as extra "methods" for purse, reddit, etc... Perhaps the writer of the ebook could have taken a different approach to that. But none the less, if you compare what you purchased to what is being sold... Everything matches.

If you do not like the fact he added some extra resources in there, then just do not use the resources. It is very simple. If you thought the method was not worth $50 you could have simply left a review on his thread stating that you purchased, and think it is not worth $50. So long as you did not break TOS or any rules, then you would be fine. Disputing this is just the wrong way to go about all of this.

The rates being advertised and what people are purchasing for, can not be achieved with purse.io

Only with the other sites, he stated already these were bonuses included in the guide. For the seller to say it does not involve purse.io is a fair statement, given that you can achieve the advertised rates without using purse.io at all.

You guys are forgetting one key factor.

Remove the bonuses "Reddit, Purse, whatever" and you are still left with what the seller advertised to be selling. It is not some sort of requirement to use these in order to achieve what is being sold to the user.

You can see it from 2 sides:

I want to change my opinion a bit because he never states it's an E-book. so basically, the method didn't contain the extra purse.io etc. The PDF did.

To avoid mixups, maybe state it a little bit clearer in the PDF, stating: extra method:purse.io

Agreed I stated this earlier, perhaps the author of the ebook could have used different terminology. But regardless it was not a scam, and there is more to the guide than using reddit, purse, paxful etc..

The thing is the OP does not stick to his story. He switches back and forth with what his issue is in this dispute. Spanning all the way from him lying, to expecting the method was not related to flipping, and then of course "effectively at higher rates".

Nothing seems to add up, if he did not believe it was worth $50 he should have posted on the sales thread with an honest review, not opening a dispute.

Disputes should be used for scams, not for when you do not like the product. Hell that is why I only shop at stores with refund policies! If the user wanted insurance in case he needed a refund, he could have asked before purchasing and sending money!
