When I read stuff like that it convinces me that Brave is onto something huge.

Going to set a target price of $2 in 2020. Current price as of this post is 43 cents.

Read what Brave is doing with BAT and maybe you'll agree.

I got 20 bat from using the mobile browser for a while.

I recently 'tipped' 10 Bat to HF, but what does it do exactly? Is it just like donating any other crypto?

ShinyThings - April 24, 2019, 11:57 am

Makes me wish I would have held on to my bat bags from last year...

I still have some 30 BAT left with me. Let's see.

BTC - April 24, 2019, 12:10 pm

I had invested quite a bit when they first brought it on to binance ? Got real low, and going to be holding until it goes up a lot. I believe it will grow even beyond the $2 price-point.

The developers behind Brave itself, are truly great developers that I would support any day. Hopefully their hard work makes me some money too ?

BAT and the Brave browser are going to change everything.

Currently a lot of people use ad blockers. But what if you were paid for all those ads you see?

And instead of paying Google Adwords all their money you instead used BAT to advertise on the Brave Ad Network?

Publishers are going to want to use BAT to advertise. Viewers are going to earn BAT from the browser. There is a lot of win here for the future of BAT.

Online ad revenue is well past $100 Billion annually just for Google.

<https://www.statista.com/statistics/266249/advertising-revenue-of-google/>

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Google_Ads

Quote:Google Ads has evolved into Google's main source of revenue, contributing to Google's total advertising revenues of US$95.4 billion in 2017.

Brave+BAT can easily take 10-25% market share over the next few years. At just 5% of market share I'd expect the market cap of BAT to be near 2 billion which is a 400% increase in today's price and close to $2 per BAT.

So imho this isn't just a guess at value. It's hard numbers from a sector with proven profits. The only question is how much and how quickly can Brave Browser gain market share.

the only "problem" i see with brave is that when you are buying ads on there you will not be able to target your target audience because the ads are not following you if they can fix that i'mma bag up on bat a lot more (when price drops)

The whole point is they can't fix that. The whole point is to get rid of those annoying ass ads that follow you around from site to site.

Solution:

I run a restaurant in New York

Someone googles restaurant in new york - i get posted (like a google ad above) its not following you around on any other websites or tracking you.

Imagine spending 1000$ on ads for your local business and it gets place on HF.

Or spending that amount of money on ads for your business that only serves for example the netherlands and it spreads it around the world.

Not a great deal to switch from google to brave then

It may not be great for localized businesses which is why I don't think BAT/Brave will ever supplant Adwords for market share. But I'd say they can hit a 10-20% market share which is huge and more than enough to be in a solid position.

Brave as a browser is great. Tipping people and sites is great.

But being realistic, the premise that people will watch ads for money is dumb and will likely fail. I don't see them getting a piece of the pie in the advertising market share.

I completely disagree about people getting paid to watch ads. Back in the day this was a thing on the internet. Unfortunately it had real problems with fraud and the traffic you bought was getting lower and lower in quality until most of the places that sold ads this way closed down.

What Brave is doing is an excellent usage of blockchain technology and because of their own BAT integration with their browser it's perfect.

It's a great idea on paper and only time will tell if it will work. But I have no hope it will because is kinda of a contradiction with the browser itself.

People download it because ads are annoying, but then they will activate it with hope of earning a few pennies a month? That makes 0 sense. I think I'm not the only who finds the notification system of ads annoying as hell, even more obnoxious than sidebar banners on websites. It takes one click to take them off.

Where I see this being super difficult to adopt is now, when people will basically click ads to get free BAT, without interest in the ad itself, because the average joe who activates ads are the geek nuts who like crypto. Conversion rates will be low, like really low, not to say zero. And lets not get started when ad viewing bots are a thing lol.

It will be an interesting experiment and I will test it out as advertiser when they roll it out for the general public. I have a crypto website so the conversion rates should be reasonable, ill report back.

Not why I downloaded it. I personally like their stance on privacy better which does include ads but for me it's not about blocking those ads it's about being tracked by them.

I would use this browser even if BAT wasn't part of it. It's clean and fast with good features.

Quote:Where I see this being super difficult to adopt is now, when people will basically click ads to get free BAT, without interest in the ad itself, because the average joe who activates ads are the geek nuts who like crypto.

I don't think Brave is offering a CTR. This would open them up to false clicks and low quality traffic for webmasters.

I've started investing into BAT ever since I installed Brave Browser. Brave is a great project by itself, wouldn't be surprised if BAT go even higher than 2$ at some point.

BottomNotch - April 30, 2019, 3:24 am

My thoughts as a Marketing major: Swagbucks/those kinds of sites are better.

Reason: Not only do I get tracker data, but I also can choose not to pay without repercussions.

That being said, I do see the market and how websites MIGHT prefer this. Although, I don't know how many companies want to pay people to see ads they most likely aren't interested in (hence why these companies like trackers).

You will get BAT for viewing, clicking, and interacting with the ads. That will lead to worthless clicks and worthless interactions with ads from people willing to get free BAT.

Quote:Not why I downloaded it. I personally like their stance on privacy better which does include ads but for me it's not about blocking those ads it's about being tracked by them.

I get you, but you are one in millions who downloaded it for that reason. I got surprised when I saw my sister (not a nerd like us) using it. I didn't even get the opportunity to shill it. But her reason was a simple "it doesn't have ads and its fast".

And I don't blame her, ads are annoying. The truth is, the general public still doesn't care enough about online privacy, even after all of Zucc's data disasters.

2020 going to be an exciting year. Going to make 6 figures off BAT and become a millionaire from B2X from <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5922545>

Can you run BRAVE on a mobile phone? Currently there is no adblock solution for a non-rooted android phone. You can use a VPN type ad block system but that runs the battery down. The Adblock browser (makers of adblock extension) isn't very good.

The way I see it is this would be very nice for mobile phones as most people are already seeing ads on their phones.

It's funny how many people always claim to have bought at the absolute bottom & sold at the absolute top.

If you did, well done.

But I don't believe you because 90% of the people who say this are just straight up lying, the 0.85$ top hasn't even lasted a day so it's quite unlikely.

That's it. I'm letting omni's guesses handle my investments at this point, i literally put in $18 BAT yesterday when it was at 0.30 and it reached 0.37 suddenly today, i sold because i saw it go down but i bought more again when i saw this thread

Mudhoney - May 10, 2019, 2:41 pm

Bought BAT again, last hodld bat in 2017 and sold. Bought at 0.28 cents. Funnest profit in a while.

This was the day publishers got paid. Each month the publishers get their commissions and I assume a percentage of them immediately put them onto exchanges to sell. So that's going to drive BAT down on that day almost everytime. It bounced back the next day btw and today it's at .364 (as of this post).

Quote:Right now could be a great time to buy before it takes off

Agreed. I can see BAT hitting in the 60 cent range within 2-3 months. The hard part is getting it past $1 but I think that will be the opening push.

Some of the BAT ecosystem I don't yet fully understand but I'm digging into it.

Things I do know:

1. It's a great browser.
2. The people behind this project are amazing. They are the dream team for such a project.
3. BAT does things no other crypto can do.
4. Development has been very steady and at a strong pace.
5. Their social media presence continues to grow. Suggest you at least follow their Twitter for their updates.

One has to wonder but looking over the past few months it doesn't appear to be the case. I think with the large price increase those who got the BAT sold off and took profit. Who knows if that's going to continue.

Hmm okay, I guess we can only hope! Brave is a great product so I'll be investing anyways, I think your prediction is quite realistic.

MegaByter - May 11, 2019, 11:00 pm

BAT and the Brave browser is my favorite crypto project ever by far. The fact that they have a working, amazing product is sweet.

But what REALLY sold me, and was the reason I invested, is the fact that its headed by the person who created Javascript... which is the backbone of the modern internet, I mean... There isn't anyone better suited to build a privacy browser lol.

Yea it spiked to 0.40 and now having some resistance. As to be expected with such big strides in BTC itself ?

If BAT hits $2 by 2020 I am going on a nice vacation with my fiancée that is for sure!

I use Ledger personally.

I know both Ledger & Trezor support holding BAT.

But you can literally use brave wallet itself.

To be honest I'm not sure you can. I get my BAT as a publisher sent to me on a separate wallet. I'm trying to see how to send to an address from Brave Browser but I don't see the option. You can backup your Brave wallet with the seed and that's maybe how you can move funds.

I reached out to support 2 weeks ago, and received a reply stating that there is no way at this time. I can contribute to people like yourself, as a way of withdrawing my BAT from that wallet, that is essentially the only way. Yes you can, but to earn a decent amount, you'll need to be a publisher, I'm a normal user and earn BAT, turn it on via the triangle on the search bar.

Omni is not usually the man to call very short term interests.

BAT has technically shown to be strong in terms of their value in BTC throughout the whole bear market (For as far as I can see it's one of the very few crypto's that is actually above their ATH BTC value at the moment)

Fundamentally speaking people in general are more & more up to date on how big tech companies use our data to make big bucks & how they really do not care about our privacy at all. Google is definitely one of them, if not the biggest. It's time to really start looking for alternatives in my opinion.

I don't think so. I think they are happy as an ERC20.

Quote:Out of curiosity, whats your view on ADA?

What's Cardano doing that's different from a dozen other projects? Not saying it's a poorly run blockchain or that it's not a good technology but what separates it in the market from something like Ethereum? ADA just seems like ETH to me. Even in their whitepaper they seem to want to just put together things other chains do. I think the best part of Cardano is that it's run by some smart people.

BAT on the other hand is attacking a sector and has the potential to fully disrupt it.

You wont be alone.

I honestly just can't wait till facebook, instagram & snapchat lift the crypto ban and that'll be when coins as BAT can truly advertise what they are trying to do.

So far it doesn't seem like people are being pressed on the facts yet, it's only the people who are researching themselves that are seeing the improvements & visions that some of the crypto's have.

(Jun 5, 2019 09:50 AM)Nizzy Wrote: (CITE) So you're backing BAT in this case. Out of curiosity, whats your view on ADA?

I think BAT is supported by many people because their use-case is truly a nice & problem-solving one.

It's actually proven that people are supporting BAT's vision because of the way that it's been traded, very differently from the way that ADA has been traded & many other altcoins have been traded. BAT shows to be strong, just like Litecoin & a few others. I'm sure there'll be more alts that will show that their strong in the coming time, we still have to really go through the phase where a lot of alts permanently die, which is a little overdue in my opinion & very necessary.

Look at any ad source.

Google Ads

Facebook

They started cheap and gradually get more expensive as more and more advertisers adopt the platform.

This could drive up the price of BAT.

Not sure if this is still relevant but no that's not how it works. You can use adblock but just make sure you enabled the brave reward and be in the region that advertisers are pushing out a shit ton of ads. The ads you received are not from the websites you visit but from the browser itself(brave servers). It just sends you notifications of ads while you browse. So basically what brave wants to do is make advertisers pay to advertise through their browser instead of placing ads on different websites ? hope that makes sense. Monopolizing ads is how I see it

Correct, you will need to make sure brave can send desktop notifications and also quiet hours/focus assist is off.

Any brave linked sites / new tab page can trigger ads.

I agree 2$ might not be realistic anymore, but in your opinion what is your prediction as of now?

CryptoBot - May 7, 2020, 4:10 am

I think we're more looking at under a dollar for at least another year or two. I am not sure how rapidly Brave adoption is being scooped up.

My fear is obviously more people using Brave = More BAT Generated by ADs, this could work in our favour as more companies will invest in ads served by Brave and not traditional ones.

It could have the opposite effect and the value decreases as people have so many BAT's but can't do anything with them.

BAT, though it's failed to break .50 and that resistance a couple times, don't be a fool to think it's not a good project.

The browser is great and helps reduce ad traffic, and there's an incentive with it's rewards too.

It's a cool project, but they have definitely taken shady actions to try and monetise it while being pretty dishonest about how they do this from what I've seen.

I think this reply puts it best

You can read about some of these instances here:

<https://nitter.net/cryptonator1337/status/1269594587716374528>

<https://archive.vn/cAGpe>

Those are just three I've seen, heard of a few more also.

By the way I'm not criticising the call, a lot of people like Brave which is evident as they keep getting new users everyday but overall I think they're just as shady and scummy, if not more than other web browser providers.

That depends on how you look at things. Let's, for the sake of argument, say that the price of 1 BAT remained at $1 USD for an entire year. You could argue that the price hasn't changed at all, but in the meanwhile, inflation (and many other economical factors, for that matter) is(/are) still a thing when it comes to the USD.

If we take our hypothetical experiment a bit further in order to clarify what inflation means, let's argue that last year you could buy one whole bread with $1 USD but this year, you can only buy half a bread with only a single USD.

This is just a tiny fraction of how economics work, and how things can actually decrease or increase in value due to the many factors that are at play here, and not just the 'price' of something.

Omniscient - December 13, 2020, 5:22 pm

I guess that's true, and because of the pandemic I'm sure, for some, most of the things that were considered common or negligible are of value now, currency itself cannot feed people if no one is willing to take them.
