Thread: So Google saved my nudes I deleted 5 years ago...

Leroy Jethro Gibbs - April 30, 2019, 2:19 am

I decided to download my Google data and see exactly what was in that data. As I was going through the shit they got, I found pictures with direct web links that go to nudes I deleted specifically from Google Photos 5 years ago.

This pretty much answers the question of does Google keep your deleted information.....

so needless to say, don't save your nudes on Google Photos. I recommend KeepSafe Imao.

You know.... I think I don't even want to continue looking in that case. Can you go to jail for nudes of an ex that you already deleted? Like you would get a slap on the wrist for nudes for both yall being underage but its completely different it that shit is within your data even though you already deleted it. Do you have the possibility to be charged for child porn even though you technically don't have any nudes?

It seems time to look for a good alternative of search engine who does not follow your activity

I think the issue is bigger than just a search engine. There is so much data unrelated to Google. Its got copies of all the orders I've ever made with Amazon even though the orders were made with an Outlook account.

Yes, I agree with you. I think these services may share tracking cookies or something similar, and looks no longer related only to one account.

Yup. Google now has every single picture I've taken with my iPhone & Android. When I was switching phones it made me upload everything to Google Photos. Rip.

Oh god, it probably has every single address I've visited too.

Just went on my old gmail - It use to be my main email - haven't been on it since 2014.

For reference lmao

It's kinda nice to have because

Eznetscan was pretty nice back then

Why would you store dick pics on google?

All it takes is sending it to someone - you have to remember most of us aren't kids born with snapchat already existing either.

There was a good 3 years of Android alone (2008 to 2011) before snapchat was a thing -

Took a hot second to find the link. Here it is for anyone who wants to see what Google has kept <https://takeout.google.com/settings/takeout>

Let's see what I can dig up with this. I wonder if my "deleted" Google Drive documents are still there :/

We'll find out in "a long time (hours or possibly days)"

Its kinda crazy how much info they have on us. Of course, they are using AI right now to understand this data and to learn more.
