Thread: Should 11-year-old girls have to bear their rapists' babies? Ohio says yes.

Quote:An 11-year-old rape victim in northwestern Ohio is pregnant, according to news reports, and a highly restrictive state law on abortion signed last month says a girl in her position must carry and deliver her rapist's baby.

There has to be enough representation of females by a fixed quota in the government to provide pressure on such decision by the state because they understand what rape actually is.

11 year old and giving birth to a baby.. damn. seems like OHIO is still stuck with middle ages notions.

i imagine they have deep catholic roots if this is the case, as many catholics are strongly against abortion.

If that was my daughter I'd state hop until I found one who could do the procedure, thats fucked up.

Alabama says that you shouldn't have an abortion from pretty much the time you'd actually learn about it.

Not sure if that link specifies what Alabama wants (It's being delayed right now) but it was no abortions after 6 weeks I believe. So when a woman has a period that's 2 weeks late - so just learning that they're pregnant.

Alabama, Ohio, these are the absolute worst places in America filled with complete fools. This is speaking from my personal experiences.

I read something yesterday that if a woman from Georgia leaves the state for an abortion they can be charged with murder. It's absolutely pathetic imo.

Jesus christ, that's horrible. (I would just escape and never return there if i was her tbh.)

I don't really get why they should be treated like a criminal.
