Me neither, your English is just as bad as his and you're laughing at him.
Well lets just say I'm laughing at both of you, but mostly you.

My English is far from perfect since it isn't my mother tongue. Im not so arrogant to make fun of someone who also doesn't speak good English. However, I posted it because OP did an incredibly stupid statement (and not because of his English...)

Still, thanks for correcting me :)

Well, if you search for a free botnet that works well, here is your answer:

There is no good free botnet.

Because they usually don't get updates, don't have innovative features and even if they do, analysts will make them worthless within one week. And in general they are not advanced enough to be taken serious because no dev will release a high quality bot for free if he could sell it for a lot of money.

And I'm talking about the free releases. I don't have to explain why you shouldn't use cracks, right?

This is honestly a waste of time one ip can only provide two views per video with the new youtube update.

This is where you're totally wrong. Analysts wont make anything "worthless" within a week. Do you somehow think that analysts analyze the free botnet and supply these infos to AV companies and they'll update their runtime engines? Do you somehow think that these analysts wont analyze the fuck outta any botnet, paid or not, given that they have access to VT API? I can assure you it does not matter one bit if its paid or not. Of course some people would release a high quality botnet for free, some people just love to code, take a look at github and think about if for a second how many sources there are and how many of these they couldve actually made a bunch of money on?

Sure you might as well explain why someone shouldnt use cracks too, if you know how to analyze and determine if the crack is safe, there is absolutely no reason not to use it. If its good of course.

Why don't you just buy normal youtube views? You don't have to create your own botnet for this.

This isn't as easy as you think. YouTube has a very smart system to detect botted views, if you just spam the clicks on your videos the channel will be deleted after just minutes. Also, you will need A LOT of bots to even make this profitable.

Hmm. But with good system when the bots coming 100 views hour for example, and if you have 5k bots, is everything what you need because you can make 5 YT accounts and make every day video, you can make good money. or??

I think mining is one of the easiest methods possible. If you have 5K bots with an OK-quality you would easily make more money than with YT with less effort and less risk. You could also sell traffic or use PPI networks.

That is true but most of PC detect instantly miner, and selling traffic is not profitable when i get 1$ cpm what are you thinking?

Depends on which miner you use and how it's configured.

I doubt you will make much more with YT. 1 mio views will earn you about 2k. And I think it's kinda hard to even get 1 mio views with out being detected.

I didn't mean mining btc ^^.

Monero would be a better choice. How much you'll earn heavily depends on the quality of your bots.
I think 500$ per month with 1k ok-bots would be realistic.

Would you mind sharing your set-up for your mining?

I am interested in getting started with (bot) Monero mining.
