Quote:whether it's known to you, yourself otherwise whether or not the person sitting next to you knows this there are others you've yet to meet who are going to need you here your impact shatters to the ground beneath to what seems is only violating the surface a subtle scratch in the painting chipping away at the chip on the canvassed shoulder they cry out their eyes out but the birds still chirp away cheering for you, you, your best, do while still here in flesh unstill time runs through us short, hereditary fly, fly on by bye bye aviary, i am caged in no more, i fly on to never land where dreams meet before shaking hands becoming more than what meets the eye of neverland is it reality is it a world dreamt to see all struggle to reach theirs, to succeed to achieve what was meant not mine
not my luck
not to see his face on that cover to see theirs oh so bright blinding is to look in, beaming all eyes of white, purely light hope you enjoy this piece

I like that man. I wrote a poem in 2014 called Stargazing 2014. It was for extra credit in one of my classes. I just had to throw something together real quick. It took about 5 minutes, but I wanted to refine it in gold. I was getting into it but had to be in class in like 10 minutes. All I know is I got some extra credit and it looked good to my teacher.

Lo! Thank you man. I thought it was pretty tight, especially for 5 minutes and late for class. I love writing, I just haven't really sat down and done it.
