Thread: Is amazon prime gift safer than agc's here?

ingenious - June 11, 2019, 8:33 pm

I need to stock up my main amazon for a large purchase. I don't want to do it in one go but in increments.

Is amazon prime gift's a safer option than agc's available here? I don't want to lose any money or risk getting my account banned.

From what I've heard, yeah, its safer to get balance instead of just codes

Personally never had an issue with amazon prime, but have had issues with agc.

na its not. prime is an easier way to get scammed

I had issues with both primes and gift cards. It all depends who you buy from/what were the funds from.

If you are willing to take my advice, either buy from one person that large stock that you know he is good for it than buy from fuck ton of sellers and get your acc locked/closed with 2K in it only because a 25$ code got charged back.

Because Amazon will never refund you for lost balance when they close your account.

They used to send a cheque if your account got closed with balance.

They don't do that anymore?

No, they don't.

I lost an account with $239.00 cuz of a bad code.

Not sure tbh, never asked for one because when i got closed i got closed with low amounts like 20-40 bucks so i never bothered.

But if i remember the email they send you correctly, they tell you they will not refund you in any way and you should contact the person who sent you / sold the gift card. Would quote the exact email but on phone so cba

You buy lots of AGC's

Mind suggesting a safe seller out here?

It was more than 3 years ago.

When I redeem the codes, I wait a couple of days before placing an order, cuz they close your account when you place an order and the code is revoked.

If the code is sitting on your account and is charged back, they just remove it from your balance with no consequences.
