Lawl

On most of websites, even more if they are famous, passwords are not stored as they are, they are stored as hashed, and they also are salted for more security.

You request seems complicated, tbh.

The best way to do this is via social engineering and phishing or if your able to gain access to the servers, pc's or whatever keylogging and monitoring of your intended victim is the only way to go.

There are plenty of tutorials to be found online don't just expect answers to be given to you.

You won't find a tutorial on how to hack a specific website, you have to learn how to do it nobody is going to hack something that you want for free ? You will have to learn about website security, different areas such as the what hosts the website, whats the backend etc.

If you aren't willing to put the effort in yourself then I don't really know how to help you.

Do some research
Find out the webapp used in that forum or website ..
Look out for vulnerabilities.

Do some reverse eng. too may be other sites on the server are vulnerable to attacks.
