

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: How to turn 180 day limitation to 45 days PayPal?

Junx - June 15, 2019, 11:14 pm

Does anyone know how my funds can get available in 45 days instead of 180 days on PayPal? Currently I'm perm limited and it's saying I need to wait 180 days. But I've read about it being possible, if anyone has any info I'd really appreciate it

?Apocalypse - June 15, 2019, 11:16 pm

(Jun 15, 2019 11:14 PM)Junx Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Does anyone know how my funds can get available in 45 days instead of 180 days on PayPal? Currently I'm perm limited and it's saying I need to wait 180 days. But I've read about it being possible, if anyone has any info I'd really appreciate it
I saw a video on youtube emailing everybody on PP, but doubt it works.

There is no other way.

Junx - June 15, 2019, 11:19 pm

(Jun 15, 2019 11:16 PM)?Apocalypse Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I saw a video on youtube emailing everybody on PP, but doubt it works.

There is no other way. Yeah I also read about emailing the BBB and filing a complaint too. I know its a real thing for them turning the 180 day hold to 45 so that might be the way

ChefPowder - June 16, 2019, 12:01 am theres another method but not allowed here and you would have to pay for it as allows u to get funds in 30 days

Sickness - June 16, 2019, 1:21 pm

Depending on your laws they cannot hold your money for that much of time, for example on California there was a member and he looked up the laws and filled a report on paypal and they removed the lock.

Sick - June 16, 2019, 1:25 pm

Well if there is a method and you have to pay maybe it's a good idea you do

I have an old paypal account same thing happened had to wait 180 days guess what over a year passed and still no access to the money i have just wrote that money off as i have a few other paypal accounts and didn't want to bring any heat to those ones

marv-un - June 16, 2019, 6:25 pm are you talking about 180 hold when you get limited?

Fugg - June 16, 2019, 7:58 pm

My best suggestion to you would be to contact BBB and file a complaint.

Then notify PayPal of your BBB complaint and give them any specifics or complaint number etc. etc.

You have about a 50/50 chance of them lowering the time.

Wick. - June 16, 2019, 8:16 pm

You call them and explain that you are no threat for potential future chargebacks, give them a fair reason why you are not.

The 180 days is by default because chargebacks can be done for 180 days after a transaction is done.

When your account is limited and empty it will cost them cash when someone chargebacks, because nobody will do the effort to up their negative balance when they are permanently limited anyways.

They will add you to some kind of review list which means that your account will be reviewed once per month to see whether it's still a threat for chargebacks or not, the moment it isn't anymore according to them your funds can be released.

Whether you are a threat for chargebacks and therefore a threat for their funds, will most likely depend on your account history, amount of previous chargebacks, how old the account is, the amount of transactions you've done with paypal, whether your identity is verified and what kind of transactions it are as well.

It could also be that you haven't received money for 2 months for example, before you got limited, then it means that those 180 days automatically get decreased to 4 months instead, that is if you let them know.

(Jun 15, 2019 11:16 PM)?Apocalypse Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I saw a video on youtube emailing everybody on PP, but doubt it works.

There is no other way.

That doesn't work anymore, it's a very old method which used to work for a short while but it will only do bad for your account if you still try to do so.

I've done that to one account once to test it out, that account still has funds on it which i can't get out, that was 4 years ago.

When i login all contact buttons and links are gone as well.

(Jun 15, 2019 11:19 PM)Junx Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yeah I also read about emailing the BBB and filing a complaint too. I know its a real thing for them turning the 180 day hold to 45 so that might be the way

Trust me, it is not the way, do not try this, read my reply towards "?Apocalypse"

(Jun 16, 2019 07:58 PM)Kapuas Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) My best suggestion to you would be to contact BBB and file a complaint.

Then notify PayPal of your BBB complaint and give them any specifics or complaint number etc. etc.

You have about a 50/50 chance of them lowering the time.

Paypal isn't doing anything illegal, you've agreed to their TOS when you created an account.

They are not keeping the money, they are just temporary holding on to the funds in case people do chargebacks, hence the 180 days which is used by default (but can be decreased), that is because chargebacks can be done for 180 days after a transaction, it's mentioned in their TOS.