Probably fake, lmao. 16 and buys rolex. Why not invest?

its not fake, this isnt the first luxury item like this ive bought, i make good money. i dont make it off investing.

Wafflemonger - June 23, 2019, 12:47 pm

People go about this the wrong way, they think short term. Now, don't get me wrong, if it's legit, then that's pretty damn cool and a really great achievement at 16. However, I think that thinking long term would be more beneficial, especially if you make the type of money you seem to claim to make.

Invest all of it (savings account, bonds, mutual funds, etc) and instead of splurging now, you can retire early with all the money you saved. Instead of working until you're like 60/70, retire when you're 45/50. That's the dream right there.

? Soufian ? - June 23, 2019, 12:49 pm

Sorry to crush your dreams mate, but you got scammed for real.

Rolex crown only has 4 points, not 5.

Nah kidding, if it's REAL... then congrats. But if the money isn't hard earned by yourself or it's fake, then it's nothing to brag about.

Return it and put the money in your retirement funds.

In 40 years, that $10k you spent on it would be worth around $534k at an average rate of 10%

Thats still 14.600 days or 350.400 hours or 21.024.000 minutes or 1.261.440.000 seconds. I know this might sound stupid, but its much more fun spending some money now, atleast when you can actually afford it.

but i also feel ya, 500k is a lot of money for just waiting.

A man that cannot wait that long for a 490k return is a man that should not be associated with.

If you made it yourself then well done. It is like when you get super rich super quickly and you shove all that money in a car. You'll be happy for a while but later you will regret it despite of smiling every time you rethink about the moment of buying the car. It is not the car that made will make you happy it is that you made the money yourself to buy the car. Good job to you for earning that money when you are 16. I see people in their 30s and still struggle financially. If you were able to make that amount of money you have a big future kid.

Waste of money. I assume you are doing something illegal, based on your age. Your opsec is shit kiddo. This could be used as proof against you in court.

Even if you are making this legally, are you paying taxes? I doubt you are. Tax evasion can fuck you up.

Bandz4Dayz - July 22, 2019, 2:17 pm

hey man who cares man fake it to you make it

Vossen - July 22, 2019, 2:45 pm

First, please do everyone a favor and never ever wear a watch over your sleeve again. This makes you look dumber than you probably are.

Then - why is the bracelet two links too big? As zSerity already said, any AD would've adjusted it for you after buying it, heck, even when you buy it online most trusted online ADs will ask you for your size and adjust it accordingly.

The teeth on the bezel are way. too. f*cking. sharp. It hurts even looking at it.

The = sign in 1000ft=300m looks too short (might be wrong, too blurry there), the "m" seems too near to the 300.

I don't even see the circumferential laser engraved "ROLEX". It's completely missing. Might be the light situation, but usually it's very clearly visible even in bad light situations. So it's either not there at all or barely visible and therefore fake.

The five "dots" on top of the Rolex crown don't look right as well.

The picture is hella blurry and don't quote me on anything of this, but based on this picture this thing is at DHGate / AliExpress level. Don't get me wrong, if it is real, props, but afaict it's not.

K.

If you invested the time you're trying to look rich to actually become rich, you might even achieve it. But nah. Better buy cheap ass watches from DHGate to impress your school buds. Easier, right?
If the watch was indeed real, post clear pics that weren't taken from a potato showing the magnification of the cyclops, the sharpness of the teeth on the bezel, the laser-engraved "ROLEX" + the laser-engraved crown, as well as the quality of the lettering, and I'll take back everything and transfer you 1 grand through PayPal.

Based on the blurry-ass picture you've posted so far, this watch is a blatant fake that any watch connoisseur would recognize as one from 10ft away.

this shit is fake as fuck:

1. no "rolex" wording around the inner sides of the watch (or just retarded picture)
2. doesn't say swiss made at the bottom (or shitty picture)

might be able to notice more if your image wasn't dogshit
