Thread: Learning Spanish or Learning Photoshop? Which would be more beneficial?

Condoms - June 24, 2019, 10:30 pm

So.. To make things fair..

I live in a town/city where 75% of the people speak Spanish; I never took Spanish in highschool or college as I was homeschooled.

I feel it would be good to understand them, and be able to communicate with them as they come by my business daily.. etc.

Photoshop. Friend recommends that I learn it. Says it is very beneficial and fun. Someone even told me it would be good to learn and eventually get into and start up a business or some sort, of photo manipulation and all that.. (Money isn't a issue.. I can get all the adobe products for $20 a month with my student ID)

What do you think would be the best thing to learn would be? Which would be more beneficial?

Photoshop / Graphics design if you're planing a computer job.

Spanish if you're planing for a IRL job.

& One day maybe learn both.

I went to school for computer science/hardware.. etc.

I know nothing about graphics.

My current job.. Has nothing pertaining the use of computer graphics.. etc.

I know nothing about Spanish either.

I would say photo shop because ifnnothing works out you can resort to making memes

Honestly that made me laugh.

I heard meme pages make good money with reposts. ?

I don't learn anything from it. I think if you make such a choice, then learning Spanish will be more useful than Photoshop. You can study photoshop later or combine, it's not too hard.

realjakemadison - June 25, 2019, 4:16 am photoshop has more potential tbh, it's more useful

Think long term which one could help you the most.

Also why would you buy the adobe products?

Spanish, you can then meet your love of your life qt... me encanta

I HATE Spanish learning Spanish it was the worst part of every day in high-school, now on the other hand I would relatively enjoy my digital design class. Although we did not work exclusively in photoshop we did use it a lot. So for me I would say photoshop would be more entertaining and interesting to learn.

Not fan of Spanish language, my parents forced me to learn it when I was younger, didn't work...

However, now I really think that could be helpful, and a real plus on my CV

apepi - June 25, 2019, 12:47 pm

If it was me i'd say spanish but you seem like ur a geeky (no offense kek) so photoshop

Dragonvixs - June 25, 2019, 12:50 pm

photoshop is what i will recommend

If people where do you live speak Spanish maybe is better to learn it, anyway I'm sure you can do both ?

debian - July 27, 2019, 8:30 pm

If you want to travel then definitely Spanish. You would be surprised how much knowing another language opens up doors

Beaks - July 27, 2019, 8:40 pm

It depends what you value. We can't make this decision for you. Why not do both? I work in a place where 95%+ speak Spanish and not english and i can't speak spanish. I still make good money doing my job.

On one hand it's a whole other demographic to look into, on the other you lose out on valuable skills.

I'd say do Photoshop first as you can make some money this way, then Spanish second so you have another audience to branch out to eventually.

Choose language in photoshop in Spanish and you're learning both.

Pawnhub - July 28, 2019, 1:47 am

Spanish is pretty easy to learn when I was learning some.

Photoshop I got no clue.

Depends on where you want your life to go really. I suggest learning both.

Vagues - July 28, 2019, 5:09 pm

If 75% of your town can truly speak Spanish you will be at a great disadvantage when applying for jobs. Local business' will look for individuals who can speak the language a majority of people can understand. For example, if 75% of your town could speak English, and you couldn't, do you think they would hire you over anyone else?

Zan - July 29, 2019, 12:48 am

I recommend choosing photoshop. If you speak decent english you don't need spanish. This is my opinion.

You can make a schedule to help you manage your time properly, So you can do both, Photo-shop is not that hard, you just need to keep trying new things and challenging yourself..Tons of Youtube videos to help you out on that, Dont really know much about spanish but best way to learn a language is to first of all fall inlove with the culture and people, Our human brain can do anything...
