Thread: I got a job interview in a couple hours. Edit: Got the job!

debian - July 15, 2019, 8:25 am

I applied to a job as a camp counselor this morning and already got an interview in a couple hours.

I don't see any reason why I shouldn't get the job, but I'm still nervous as balls.

Any tips/suggestions, other than eye contact?

Edit: I got called today and I start tomorrow! I can't believe how fast that all was :D

Wish me luck guys

Thanks man! Will keep you all updated. I may have over exaggerated how "outgoing", "carefree", etc. I am in my CV, but I guess I'll just have to live up to my word :D

First impressions mean everything.

So make sure you are wearing the right thing for the job, look friendly, etc

If you do that right you are sure to get the job.

Good luck.

Fake it till you make it bro. Make up fake things you've done to make yourself look more suitable for the job.

My friend got an internship with no experience at all. But he had fake internship experiences on his resume and he just talked about them and stuff he "did" like he watched videos and googled what's it's like. He's making $17 an hour which is dope.

Congrats bro! Glad to see some of us are getting jobs. I keep doing interviews and getting passed over, or getting rejected for being overqualified.

Thanks buddy!

And yeah that sucks. Because they don't want to have to over-pay you, no? Keep trying and you'll get it sooner or later!

Android 17 - July 16, 2019, 7:56 pm

Congrats man. I'm looking for a new job myself. Old one is getting annoying.

The official reason I am given is "You are over Qualified and you might leave for a job that is better suited for your skill set/experience." so basically they don't want to risk me leaving them in a few months so they won't even give me a shot. I am not even asking for crazy pay or anything.

MichaelHubbard - July 16, 2019, 10:32 pm

Dude congratulations) I know how exciting it is. I also could not find a job for a long time and was already desperate.
