Thread: Have you ever been to times square?

FlyZone - July 31, 2019, 5:06 pm

Iv just got back from going on a trip to times square, and holy sh*t theres alot of RATS, i went around NYC with a few friends, took subways and had a blast but holy sh that might be the filthiest place iv been too, iv seen so many huge ass rats in the subway. LITERALLY they walk around the alleyways and back streets not giving a fuck, people are more scared of them then them being scared of people oh and to top of off they have a shit ton of BTC Atm machines which is dope.

The US is full of rats, you seen the people who run that place?

Ivex - July 31, 2019, 5:09 pm

Honestly thought you were talking about people at first. Yeah I've been there, it's pretty cool.

Yeah I know what you meant, I was indeed making a snarky comment about the state of politics in the US currently.

Honor And Respect - July 31, 2019, 5:11 pm

Remind me to not use the Subway when I go there lol

Hate rats

But it's where the turtles live.

MavenGradle - July 31, 2019, 5:14 pm

Never really felt comfortable walking around there. Actually I don't feel comfortable walking around in any major city. Paris is nice in the evenings if you know where to go for some less touristy places, but something just feels off. Like you always have to be careful walking around, not to get bumped into and robbed or tricked.

Im the same way man, i don't like walking around any city unless im with a few friends, iv had a situation where i was robbed for a iphone, literally. people are nuts.

webdev77 - July 31, 2019, 5:18 pm

I've been to NYC. Not a fan personally. There is some cool stuff to see and do, but that kind of life is not for me.

Deany - July 31, 2019, 5:19 pm

Yeah rats everywhere just like at Pretty Kitty's house

It's odd though, isn't it? You're supposed to feel safe. You're supposed to have the freedom to go where you please, talk to the people you want, being on a holiday everything is nice. The people are nice, yet you're always looking behind your back for any signs of trouble, avoiding certain places because of those fears and generally even in hotels having to wonder whether the maid will somehow open the safe and steal the contents of your wallet while you're out. Kinda ruins it for me.

Seeing counter terrorism units on every street corner near Times Square should make me feel safe, but it doesn't. Stuff like that makes me wonder why that's necessary and then think of all the things that crazy people do and have done in the past.

When I was a kid, I used to travel with my parents in Africa. More specifically we went to countries like Algeria and Israel and once got lost for a couple of hours in the desert but that's a different story altogether.

Point is, sometimes they'd have these kids running around with guns. That was so mind-blowingly messed up. Kids, with guns, patrolling the streets? Hell, if I was a kid and had a job like that I'd probably mess up and shoot people without thinking too much about it. I can't help but feel like one of those guys with guns, somewhere, is trigger happy enough to shoot you for bending over suspiciously in order to tie your shoes.

holy sh i hope you never been to the jfk airport, any little thing you do they find "suspicious" they'll bring you in a back room, question you for hours and check through all of your stuff, this happened to a friend of mine, he got lost and his flight was late so he was walking around panicking but i guess that raised "suspicion"

Prettykitty - July 31, 2019, 5:31 pm

Never been to NY at all, but yeah no reason to unless I want to be near charlie.

If you're lucky you might get featured on one of those national geographic airport border control videos ? . Things aren't easy these days ? .

Anyway, this is exactly why I haven't traveled using planes for the last two years. The scanners that see through your clothes? No thanks. I'd rather keep my privates private, you know?
