So me and my friend were talking about philosophy. And we began to reminisce about our youth days.

He'll be 35 soon, last thing we knew, we got older. It made me look and compare today's world, with the world I knew back then.

We were still fighting the taliban rather than attacking Isis. Technology changed from basic phones to amazing new smart phones, everything has changed so much.. Then I began to think, what would my life be like at the end? Would I know how to do the latest technology? Or would it be so alien to me, that all I can do I remember the things we had, today.

How do you see your life changing as you go on?

Everyone becomes old unfortunately, sticking with the times is impossible. I'm not even 20 yet and I barely keep up with new chart music.

Yeah that is something I can't keep up with. All these new rappers especially.

I agree with what Ivex said

In the old days, no one will be going outside..

People will be in a virtual world with headsets on.

Everyone will be in virtual reality.

Feel like people are going to advance into making suits for themselves, solar farming, more dark things may happen, and people will retaliate against the goverment? but in the end anything can happen

This reality is already just one big illusion. We are already living within a simulation, looking I to a little bit of quantum physics may also suggest that we are living in a simulated reality. (Its not a legit claim but just theories) Imagine if after you die, you wake up with a bong in your hand and you're surrounded by all your "alien buddies" and they ask you "how was your trip man?"

We are still using a forum, we clearly all hold onto what we love, and that is what I believe happens when you age, you get use to what you love.

Stoppppp. I'm tripping out right now. When I was with my buddies a few years ago I made a comment "you think when we die, we'll suddenly just wake up and it'll all just be fake" like I seriously believe that too.

It's true, we could be living in one complex computer, a processor that renders an entire universe. We could all be computer code, we wouldn't know.

Think of it like this, what's different to this reality than the ones we play in our games?

Our processors are becoming more advanced so that they can create immersive gaming worlds, why can it not be different from the world we live in?

We could technically be powering someone else reality

Quite possibly. We have free thought because maybe we are advanced AI.

Maybe we are literal robots, an artificial intelligence, artificial because we may not be real.
