Thread: [shut down a site on the search engine \[already hacked\]](#)

I already have a competitor site hacked. What do you think is the best practice to destroy the site on the Google search engine?

Cheers ?

Use a robots.txt file to block access to search engines so they aren't even listed ?

Code User-agent: *

Disallow: /

If you don't mind me saying, it's a pretty ugly move to hack your competition. Almost like you can't beat them by doing things the right way. Similar to a runner who'd tie the shoe laces of his competition so they fall to the ground at the start of a race.

I don't care about ethics, I get what I want with black hat. ?

however robots.txt would resolve itself in a short time. I'm looking for good malware / spam (I can pay good)

Cheers

Lol just ping them again and again with an SEO ping service. Google hates it when you do that.

Another option is to use Tor to use a script to view them again and again, via the search interface.

Google does its best to kill black hat SEOs. It's a two-edged sword that way.

Well a lot of people dont even know about robots.txt unless they're a administrator to the actually host.

Like the user said above me.

Google probably isnt even bothering promoting the site. Due to the content. Especially if they arent paying for advertisements or say their SEO is already ruined.

If you hacked their site then dumb the database. Crack the password. Try logging into whatever services they use for SEO, and mess with that. Even if you get access to a email it can lead to the right account.

People tend to use the same password across accounts.

But seems to me like you're not even about this life.
