Cabinet like a closet or wardrobe?

How do you even want to put your servers in here? What about cooling?

What if it gets on fire? What about dust? There must be a lot of dust in here.

That does seem to be a bad idea putting more than one server in Cabinet.

I think you never work with a dc for cabinet. Datacenters provide cooling and fire systems for cabinets and if you want to know my cabinet it is 42u wardrobe with 10gbps port speed so I can host more than one server in there easily :) You should be knowledgeable before you share your idea about something. If you need more info about my system you can contact me on discord.

Who calls Rack as Cabinet? ?

I get it but rack is used in 90% of cases.

Racks also can be called as full cabinet in dc. Have you ever tried to talk with any dc like that ?

I am in dc like that every day, edited my previous response.

But I never really seen someone saying "cabinet". I get the term though.

the way you say it, seems to be like it's in your house not a dc.

i understand now, makes more sense..

Its easy to believe that in the long run you are going to get raided or your ISP nulling your whole IP block.

I'm glad to see you learn new terms about datacenters :) If I need to write more clearly I virtualize my dedicateds which are in my "Rack" and sell them to my customers.

If I need to be honest It's happened 3 years ago in different dc but I work with my current dc since 2017 and I haven't get any nulls to my ip blocks yet. I think it depends on where you work with.

Well I personally work in a Data Center every single day and for big companies.
I can tell you this some people do call them cabinets.
My client from few years ago told me that I need to install/setup a Check Point unit in cabinet E4.
Lmfo I was very confused at first.

I do personally prefer the term rack over a cabinet all day but its more of a preference thing. It is kinda similar when people say copper or Ethernet cable or cat you get the point.

Btw to the OP respect your hustle hope you wont get shut down by ISP :P

You're right. Terms can be complicated but I think terms use depends on preference as u said. I don't have any problem with ISP. I have so many customers right now and they use their servers without any problem. Thank you for your thoughts.
