You are very misinformed, my friend. 1.) If we are both talking about the same hackbar, then Im not sure where you're getting that you can access "private links" from since these permissions are likely set on the server. 2.) Kali is an OS, not a tool. and you dont run a command to "access" an MD5 password. These types of hashes have to be cracked with good password list of some sort of polymorphic password cracker like hashcat. My advice is to go to hashkillers.

A popular hackbar that is available, requires you to reegister first and then donate. Doing that exposes your critical personal information - keep that in mind.
