Thread: Suspicious files in system32 directory

Goku - September 1, 2019, 7:16 am

I wanted to run fortnite but the anti-cheat client gave me this log which made me skeptical.

Code 15:57:11: Note: File blocks can be ignored if they don't cause problems with the game.

15:57:11: [INFO] Blocked loading of file: "C:\Windows\System32\dhcpcsvc6.dll".

15:57:14: [INFO] Blocked loading of file: "C:\Windows\System32\gameux.dll".

15:57:41: [INFO] Blocked loading of file: "C:\Windows\System32\dhcpcsvc.dll".

15:58:01: [INFO] Blocked loading of file: "C:\Windows\System32\cryptnet.dll".

Please me clean my pc.

Huhm alright, my pc just shut down when trying to open the game. I thought maybe it was those files.

But still, I would like a check-up just for the sake of it.

These files are normal. I doubt they are the reason why the anti-cheat client acted up.

Might be stupid but do you have debugging, reversing or virtualization programs installed on your system? VMware, Wireshark, Ollydbg, etc.?

Sorry, but my moral compass prevents me from giving any sort of assistance that might enable someone to play FortNite.

It's not about fortnite. anti-cheat is not only on fortnite. This was a security issue.
