Thread: Where should men shave?

duck - September 2, 2019, 5:21 am

Title is the question

Should they shave only:

Under their armpits?

On balls?

Under balls?

On legs?

Above dick?

On ass?

On arms?

On belly?

On feet?

No where?

No sex in months now. And I have that forest. Feels cushiony when you touch the place above the dick. I have also started to shampoo them. They feel so comfy Shave where ever you want to dude it's your body. Depends on the person but overall it's your preference not anyone else's.

I follow this method vouch my hair is down to my ass I can even braid it. ? ?
I look like a wookie that has time traveled into a timeline without wookies face ass.
I don't shave my beard, I use it to swing from tree to tree.
my leg hairs are so thick who needs goat spiders to make body armor.

I never get lost in the woods because my leg hairs leave a trail behind me. Imaoo.

Just playin bro but a completely hairless man looks weird imo.

well this answer is not the best either, if i would wanted to do what I want and feel comfortable I would probably be in jail, i though of joining muslim and syria for example just because they don't give a damn, I would pretend i believe in allah or what is that and just do what i feel comfortable. What are you on about? I am gonna repeat one more time. Shave want you want as long as you feel comfortable with it.

I see that you care about others people opinion about what you do more than how you feel.

honestly i would rather not shave anywhere and fuck it but there's is a problem being socially accepted, i work in a business and i kinda must look professional.

I just ask in case somebody ask me, so I won't say something foolish and they won't laugh. I need to know how other men do it as I have zero social interaction and then someone out of nowhere ask me something that's related to shaving or if i'm virgin or he laugh at me.

I don't know how to react, I just don't say anything because I don't really know what to think when someone ask me if i'm virgin or where i shave.

I don't see a point him asking this foolish question yet he does and i'm just not sure what to respond. I don't understand the reason his asking that, he's probably trying to gain some superior power over me.

The same goes if the person is trying to make fun out of me laughing to nothingness just with his friends.

Not sure how should I react, there's nothing funny neither sad I just stare and do nothing. I don't understand his feelings even though i'm emphatic I just don't get why would he laugh because of that. I never did that.

You've got to understand that there is nothing wrong with trimming/shaving. Do what you want to do. If someone asks you what do you shave so what? Answer as it is and react as it is totally normal. They laugh because you are insecure about it yourself. Be confident in what you are doing. IF you are shaving your chest, then so be it. You do it because you feel more comfortable like this. (It could be any part of the body)

Shaving is basically saying "society made me feel uncomfortable and insecure"

I trim also. But I don't see anything wrong with shaving. Reasons: bad smell, gross, sweat. All those reason make people shave/trim. It comes down to personal preference I guess.

It works the other way around as well. "Not shaving is basically saying "society made me feel uncomfortable and insecure""

I'm not worried about shaving or trimming.

But I don't understand the point of it, it's rather useless I just do it not to be denied but I guess I'm already used to it even the feeling still sucks.

If someone ask me why do I shave, the reason if a chick wants to fuck with me on toilet, I have to be prepared.

Of course they will laugh and now I don't understand why they laugh, I don't see a reason of them laughing.

I gotcha

Trim.

I find it a lot more comfortable having my pubes completely shaved. It's hot as fuck where I live, so my package is always sweaty. On the day I shave it all off, it feels so much better, a lot more comfortable IMO.

But it depends on the person, right. Like I imagine people far up north where it's cold as fuck majority of the year, likely are more inclined to keep more body hair than less.

Anima - September 2, 2019, 1:58 pm

I'd say you should trim most areas on your body dependant how hairy you are. Would you want your girlfriend to be cuddling you with her head on your chest and she gets a mouth full of your hair?

In conclusion, trim so you don't look like a child but so you're not grossly hairy

Some people might do roofing for example, in a really southern state. So they're up on a roof 10+ hours of the day, outside in the burning hot sun. They gotta be lifting a lot, doing a lot of physical exercise. Meanwhile in 100+ degrees, sweating a ridiculous amount. Why would they not shave? Imfao I think you got a real closed-mind set on this specific topic.

Just because somebody shaves a specific part of their body does not mean they are saying their 'body is useless'.

I don't think he understands humans have lost 90% of their hair because of warmer climates over the past 30,000 years.

It's all down to preference imo. I don't like having a hairy ass chest and neither does my girl, should I not shave it because "I'M A MAN!!!" and not have my girl lay on me?

Same here, and that is well known, it acts as insulation.

But BSTL is a major problem in that industry Imfao. Having fully shaved your balls is 10000x more comfortable and less of a sweat collector (obviously). In many scenarios of life, having fully shaved versus trimmed is more beneficial.

No shit sherlock, that's what it means everywhere.

I don't know where you're from or your understanding of the English language. But I clearly was stating BSTL is a problem in that industry. In no way, no where on the thread, did I say " balls sticking to your leg is solved by shaving your nuts"

The same context from the previous sentence. We were talking about the industry and how it's a well known fact having your beard helps a lot. Then I simply made a joke about how BSTL is a major problem in the industry lol. I think you get stuck up on things then don't pay attention to anything else, like tunnel vision

I don't understand how you perceive English in such a way. There must be some sort of language barrier, are you not native English? Because your lack of knowledge in English literature suggests just that, in which case this argument is pointless.

Regardless of that, the original argument (on topic) is still pointless, currently. You're no longer making rebuttals other than twisting words and trying to over exert the way you perceive things.

I have been in enough debates to realize when somebody has given up. Generally starts with the other person going off-topic, or ignoring valid points to talk about nonsense. Seems that is where this has been headed.

I've made my point to the topic. People who believe another person shaving a specific part of their body makes them a bitch, is insecure, a virgin or a little bitch. That is my stance.

My beard is roughly the same length as yours. I think we've both established your nuts got more hair than mine. Obviously, by choice.

And to be honest bro if you like having a beard, you like having hairy nuts, you got good reasoning for it...I'm all for it. I don't judge you or anyone based on the hair they got on their body whether by choice or not.

I think it comes to a point of crossing a line when people modify their bodies like savages. But something simple like shaving their nuts, making them a bitch, I just can't agree with that.

23?? I'm certainly not 23 years old. Wanna get on voice chat on Discord you'll realize real quick how you got it mixed up. I sound like an old man who's been smoking way too long for his own good.

I don't think I have to reiterate how somebody gives up an argument by going off-topic. Seems the only way you deal with losing in a disagreement is by trying to uncover personal information about someone, or pretending to. Which is just sad that is how you cope with a civil discussion on the internet.
