Thread: Medical issues are difficult to Google accurately

debian - September 16, 2019, 8:49 pm

Growing up, when you had any type of medical issues you would Google it.

Now maybe you got older and you now accurately self diagnose yourself with things like anxiety from your chest pain instead of freaking out.

If you Google chest pain at all, unless you're Googling something super specific, you're going to find all types of "OH GOD YOU'RE PROBABLY DYING" type sh*t.

As we get older, we learn more about our own bodies and need to ask Google less and less.

This is why it's so important to seek and listen to advice from older people.

Cheers! ?

Cheers! ?That's a really good point for sure. Crazy how just reading things can make you sick with panic. I have found if the mind and thoughts can make you sick, it can also do the opposite with practice.

Every time I looked up my symptoms, I was told without a shadow of a doubt that death was coming for me. Having access to so much info can really be the worst thing we can have.

cryp - September 17, 2019, 5:34 am

I've actually found the opposite to be honest. I haven't experienced the whole "x symptom = death", I've really only found what doctors diagnosed me with once I referenced it with them

Ivex - September 17, 2019, 7:54 am

Yeah I suffer from heart palpitations so Google enjoys scaring me.

TheRecklessZebra - September 17, 2019, 8:45 am

I totally agree i used to google everything, but sometimes that was not the right answer, i tend to ask people who have either experienced it or is currently going through it.

If you google, 9 in 10 times you have stage 4 cancer.

I have terrible anxiety and as much as I try to believe that its just in my head it just doesn't work.

My ex really f*cked me up in my head to where I was in NYC not to long ago and met these bitches in a bar. So we leave the bar to go smoke a blunt and go figure here is my anxiety just ramming me up my ass. I was just shaking OD and couldn't talk properly and the whole time I'm telling myself its in my head but it really couldn't be controlled. Literally was never like this, and now after my gf of 4 years left, my anxiety just shoots through the roof..

Yea I know bro I really do. My life is just so toxic its sad :(

Rigel - September 17, 2019, 5:00 pm

I'd rather not Google since it makes my anxiety even worse before a doctor visit.

debian - September 17, 2019, 5:01 pm

Never google vague medical terms

I've seen it so many times, been there myself. You just have to get away from certain people in your life. The Vampires will eat you alive man. Not just chicks, but guys also, chicks are the worst for men though. Just learn how to say no and practice being solitary. It really works. Maybe seek a shamans way and look into the plants bro, just google it but make your own mind up, like the OP says never google medical advice :)

I Google plenty of health stuff so that when I go the doctor I'm not clueless about what we're talking about.

This^

But then the doctor just down plays what you're talking about like you didn't just do 10 hours of research on the subject ?
