Thread: Am I in the wrong? \(Self deletus threats\)

Nachfolger - October 29, 2019, 6:18 pm

Someone I know closely online made suicidal threats

Am I in the wrong for contracting the authorities to passing this information forward, or was it the right thing to do?

i wont release who it is... but its [mention=1441945]

James Burnham - October 29, 2019, 6:23 pm

Definitely the right thing to do, man. Someone has to care about suicidal people.

Azlan1 - October 29, 2019, 6:27 pm

If you feel the threat is credible and not a joke, which I assume you do know their way of being, then yes I would have contacted the authorities.

I would rather be safe than sorry.

Are you using a userscript like flavoral ? Your reply didn't spark a notification.

No I don't use userscripts. I've not been receiving some notifications from time to time. Ignored users can start a convo with me as well (I was spammed 100 messages yesterday from a user I had ignored)

Cuthbert - October 30, 2019, 4:26 pm

Divorce a man from purpose and his life becomes meaningless, no better than an animal's. The trouble is that most purposes are exhausted too quickly; the only ones capable of enduring are those sustained by belief. The medieval church knew that stout walls were needed to block out the horrifying vacuum of the universe. It understood that the recognition of that vacuum was enough to send weak human beings, cursed with imagination, to insanity and suicide. That was why the church demanded absolute obedience.

On the scale of worsening issues topping yourself is certainly well up there for sure.

Dotexe - November 10, 2019, 2:42 pm

Technically no point of selfban if he had this on mind. He'll be back for sure.

Yeah it would seem to be effort for nothing. If you're planning a self ban on your life, HF hard;y seems importnat in comparison.

If you ever feel there's a serious threat of harm, contacting authorities is never the wrong thing to do. I'm not saying it's always the right or best thing, as there are too many variables to make that assertion, but it should never hang on your conscience.
