Many of you already think I'm a clown. Well, this is the final test. I'm unbelievably bullish on it. If you believe in fundamentals, BSV follows the real bitcoin protocols and white paper.

BSV is superior in all fundamental aspects. Time is ticking before everyone else realizes. Will you be ahead of the curve this time?

Kill Joy - October 30, 2019, 6:48 pm

I'm one of those people that think you're a clown. Fuck fundamentals and put your money where the money is, BTC.

MaxiPads889 - October 30, 2019, 7:55 pm

I can see BSV booming - IF BTC booms alongside it. When fees get high enough then people migrate to other coins.

BSV being the coin of choice for lower fees? Nah.

Never heard of the tulip trust, did some reading here:

I've been dca'ing BTC for the past couple months (apart from my holdings in LIT which I plan to sell in 6 months- 1 yr) Just recently made the switch to convert my btc stack to BSV. That's how convinced I am. Although, if none of the coins from the genesis block moves in early 2020 like Craig Wright says he will, then who knows BSV could tank

Keep in mind Craig Is court ordered to liquidate $2 billion in BTC to pay the Estate tax of Kleiman. That has the chance of completely crashing BTC as we know it, and could trigger a massive move towards BSV

You're gambling. Why are you basing everything off of one guy when we have a tried and true system that has been working for almost a decade with a bigger market cap than some countries in the world?

This is how people lose money, fall into debt and bad habits, then play catch-up their entire life while still chasing a falling knife.

shreder - October 30, 2019, 11:24 pm

If BSV was the real BTC craig would have gotten rid of his "1 Million" BTC long ago. The whole world, the ecosystem and infrastructure is built around BTC.

Think about it like this if $8500 BCH couldn't take down BTC even back when it was plagued with high fees and low confirmations. Nothing will end of story.

First of all i dont think he has 2bill worth btc lol and second, even if he does i am sure these big deals will be done OTC.

people exposed him so many times and u still believe that him?

Good luck with the investment tho.

David Kleiman (Satoshi Nakamoto?) died in 2013 and Craig Wright (definitively not Satoshi Nakamoto) is a fraud for a lack of a better word. Either way holding BSV by itself is risky due to centralization and low hash rates, but question you should ask yourself is that said knowledge you sit on is public knowledge, don't you think the price already adjusted and that you're just late to the party now?

EDIT: I just have to add that Craig Wright has been proven wrong time and time again, so much he had to private his Twitter. I can't be arsed of course to dig up hundreds of proofs of where he's been wrong or purposely deceitful.

Centralized mining: <https://sv.coin.dance/blocks/minerhashrate>
ViaBTC could literally perform a 51% attack if they wanted.

It's actually nothing. Market cap in crypto is a meme and a flawed way to measure a something like a cryptocurrency. I've yet to see a method to evaluate every crypto objectively. If I had to choose one now I'd incline for chain activity (in PoW coins) and BSV has laughable metrics compared to Bitcoin. It's also too centralized to be taken seriously since Craig and friends control everything from mining to development.

With $LIT, everyone that has bought has bought. Nobody is selling. And no new buyers due to a lack of marketing + mainstream attention. All this will occur in Q1 of 2020 as mentioned in their roadmap on their website lition.io. The market is stalemated right now. It's bottomed out.

I love how everyone likes to roast me about LIT. Keep in mind it went up around ~40% in a few days after I made my post. I was up more than $1k USD. It was your decision to sell or hold. I personally chose to hold and DCA over the next couple months to 4x my inital stack of lition tokens because i understand how fundamentally strong Lition is in this eco-friendly anti-global warming renewable energy climate change world.

This is a once in a lifetime opportunity in my honest opinion. My logical deducing: If Craig S. Wright has Multiple P.h.D's and 10+ masters, 850 patents, Hundreds of professional scholarly research papers, One of a couple dozen of elite Internet Proprietary and Online Software Auditors in the world, and so much more, is it really far-fetched that he created Bitcoin? I mean this guy is fng smart. Like maybe even smarter than Elon Musk, and well damn, Elon Musk has legit projects going to Mars for Christ's sake, which is so far-fetched to think one independent man can accomplish all that and make deals with NASA + the U.S. government + buying ballistic missiles from Russia.

Basically, Craig S. Wright's background is mindblowing and unbelievable, which makes believing in his BitcoinSV (BSV) more easy because of how miraculous of a person he is.

Whether he created btc or not is irrelevant.

What is relevant is that a lot of people seem to believe that he did and his coin became a top 10 coin in no time, who knows what the future has in petto for bsv but i think it's worth investing in, what i also notice is that whenever BTC goes up, BSV goes up aswell but slightly higher then btc itself.

This is what I realized. Remember when Bitcoin Cash came out and it went to $1200 one day then crashed back down then went to $4k USD?!?! I couldn't believe my damn eyes. At the beginning, I was 100% convinced Bitcoin Cash was a scam. Even though nearly everyone I've spoken with thinks BSV is a fraud, I would rather lose all my fking money than make the same mistake twice.

It took me hours of deep contemplation, research, and balls of titanium to come to the decision to convert all my BTC to BSV. I've been an online gambler since the age of 13. My risk making skills have been sharpened. I understand making calculated risks because I can estimate risk vs reward/potential payoff for nearly all situations very quickly in my head. I think in crypto, it's more profitable to inverse the "majority". It makes sense like Warren Buffet said, "be greedy when others are fearful, be fearful when others are greedy."

Yeah btc has evolved. Or for better words imo, it has degenerated and gone off-course. Btc will never be able to scale past 1MB. The "lightning network" is a fraud. Miners are supposed to enforce the rules, not create the rules because of 51% consensus. Can you attach files when sending someone BTC? No, but you can with BSV

Bitcoin wasn't intended for people to hold and sit in their wallets in hopes of getting rich. It's meant to be used for peer to peer trading and to help businesses save money, increasing efficiency, and optimizing security. "Bitcoin core" will never be able to accomplish those things, which is why BSV stands a solid chance to flip BTC.

That was never the purpose for BTC. Craig Wright was devastated when he found out BTC was being used for illegal activities and thought he had failed in his mission.

A lot of people have the misconception that Bitcoin is supposed to be anonymous and private. However, bitcoin is private but NOT anonymous. There will always be a traceable record on the IMMUTABLE blockchain.

Craig Wright said the whole purpose of bitcoin is to catch criminals, stop Money laundering, and prevent bribes given to corrupt politicians. Also all the benefits blockchain has to offer to all industries.

This interview with him shows him explaining what I said in detail

If you're going to make these arguments about BTC then BSV is not the solution because it suffers from most of the defects of BTC. You should be vested into ETH since that's a truly enhanced blockchain that goes far beyond what Bitcoin did. Ethereum is the most widely used blockchain for the past 2 years.

Ethereum is pretty low in transaction fees, delivering fast between wallets and often accepted at websites and other platforms and I haven't seen that in BTC for a long while. BTC fees are expensive and the speed of transactions are often slow when put on lower fees.

That been said; should OP have invested his 82% in Ethereum according to you? Or would you recommend another coin. Just asking for my own perspective of the crypto currencies.

I didn't say he should have 80% investment into ETH. Just that his argument is better made for Ethereum than BSV. With BTC halvening coming up I personally feel that it's where your investment should be for 2020. I love ETH for it's easy usage, low txn fees and fast confirmations. Every time a new site/service accepts ETH I'm happy.

I accept crypto for payments. 80% is BTC, 10% ETH, 3% LTC and the rest is other alts like Dash, XMR, and BCH.

IMHO that's probably a more reasonable investment percentage to make.

Arguments for BCH/BSV requires that you believe in Craig Wright and not really in the blockchain technology imho.

Okay, that's clear.

To be honest, I only invested into BTC and ETH. I did some day-trading for a few months with about 150 coins on an automated platform which went well.

I love ETH more in usage than BTC, yet I'm more familiar with BTC since a long time and feel like it still has it's potentials to grow.

I never did anything with LTC on the long term, only XMR, XRP, BTC, ETH and some other coins when day-trading.

"Sadly, Ethereum has a similar problem — as its co-founder Vitalik Buterin himself admitted. The network has a maximum capacity of 15 transactions per second, and he warned that if the status quo remains, the industry's infrastructure will be unable to cope."

15 txns that's it?

"BSV can already handle 300+ transactions per second comfortably; this capacity is continually being expanded and is expected to cross 1000+ transactions per second in the coming months after the Quasar network upgrade. This level of capacity can compete with VISA payment network capacity and also supports enterprise applications."

Additionally, "For mining to remain profitable, miners need to earn more in transaction fees from each block to compensate for the lower block reward subsidy. This is only possible on BSV. During a 21 May 2019 test on the BSV Scaling Test Network, a 1.42GB block was mined – which resulted for the first time in transaction fees which were more than the 12.5 coin block reward subsidy. This is how Bitcoin's economic model is meant to work, and this is what Satoshi always envisioned to ensure miners remain profitable.""

Most importantly, "February 2020, the BSV network will take another step in this transition with its 'Genesis' upgrade – in which the Bitcoin SV Node team will completely remove the default hard cap (or more accurately, the default hard cap will be infinite). This will open the door to infinite scaling of the BSV network, and foster the new Bitcoin culture where miners are responsible for block size" BSV has all the OG top devs working. I doubt any other sh*tcoin dev team can compete with BSV's.

Trust me, a couple months ago, I would look the the other way whenever someone mentioned BSV and instantly classify them as delusional. But after hours of research and watching interviews/presentations over the time span of a few weeks, I realize how naive I was being the whole time. Prior to that, I had only based my judgement on BSV because of sh*tty news articles like cointelegraph or coindesk etc. Once I started diving deeper into research, that's when i had the "Eureka!" moment

If you're going to use statements from Vitalik you should use this one...

<https://www.ccn.com/vitalik-buterin-ethereum-will-eventually-achieve-1-million-transactions-per-seco>

nd/

Quote: Vitalik Buterin, the creator of Ethereum, has explained in a recent OmiseGO AMA session that with second-layer solutions such as Sharding and Plasma, the Ethereum network will eventually be able to process 1 million transactions per second and potentially more than 100 million transactions per second.

That seems like a reasonable scale. Please note that currently ETH does about 1/2 their transactions per second limit so it's just fine for now. By the time the transactions are slow they will likely have a solution executed.

All I've been focused on is the Genesis Update on Feb 4 2020. BSV is gonna have UNLIMITED block sizes, “

The Genesis upgrade will also address scaling. We believe that by late in 2019 the Bitcoin SV node software will have implemented all of the safety mechanisms required to allow us to eliminate the block size cap altogether and let miners manage it without intervention from developers. So long as those changes are completed we intend to bring the planned date for allowing unlimited block size forward by almost a year and lift the cap completely in the Genesis upgrade."

Doctor. - November 7, 2019, 7:28 pm

(Nov 7, 2019 08:12 PM)TheBanker Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Do you believe Craig Wright is Satoshi?

This is what I'll tell you. I've watched hours upon hours now of him giving presentations and interviews. Craig Wright has described the core concepts of Bitcoin better than any other source and he has truly allowed me to realize things about bitcoin that never crossed my mind. His knowledge and vision for Bitcoin is truly impeccable in my opinion.

Do I believe he is Craig Wright? Maybe. We'll see what happens early 2020. Why else would OG BTC devs like Daniel Connolly, who joined nChain after 20 years in enterprise systems and held senior IT positions with various United Nations agencies. Daniel contributed anonymously to Bitcoin for several years, has contributed to the Electron Cash project, and was a primary contributor to the BitcoinJ-Cash project. Steve Shadders who "began contributing to Bitcoin in 2011, authoring one of the first open-source mining-pool engines and was one of the earliest contributors to BitcoinJ."

I seriously expect something major to happen early 2020 with three topics in mind. The halvening, Genesis Update, and 1.1 million BTC belonging to Satoshi. Even if Craig Wright doesn't move Satoshi's coins, the Genesis update will be revolutionary. Businesses will be able to truly build on the BSV blockchain due to unlimited block sizes and scaling, which will allow millions and eventually billions of txns/second to process. Not to mention, op_codes will be re-installed, which means businesses won't need to worry about the code and protocols constantly changing due to BSV strictly following the whitepaper, thus providing stability.

All I know is that the reason why I'm doubling down on BSV is because so many people aren't believers and say it's a scam.

If Craig Wright signed with Satoshi's private keys today, BSV would shoot to the moon. Most good things in this world are kept secret. If too many people knew, then it would become saturated. I interpret the "Craig Wright Satoshi" situation as the same. Right now, I can buy BSV while the majority of the world are clueless and regurgitate whatever they see off of CNBC, Coindesk, etc. It's all just one big echo chamber. I like to think of myself as a radical, free-thinker who loves gambling.

Not to mention, nChain holds hundreds of patents, with thousands more pending. They will be able to enforce any malpractices. Blockstream raised $100m usd based on 2 patents for segwit/lightning network. nChain has ~800 patents currently and is a private company. Many investors want them to go public, but money doesn't seem to be the incentive for BSV leaders. That's what shows they're dedicated for the long-term vision

Yeah i did edit it wanna know why? Because after 2 more months of researching, I realized that it's not relevant. It's all going to charity foundations anyways whenever the guy decides to move his coins.

I realized the reason why people like Calvin Ayre are invested. He's a billionaire who started the very first regulated and licensed online casino. As a child, he grew up on a pig farm and became the great success story he is today. He is a visionary. He is the biggest miner on Earth in terms of hashing and computing power from a single man.

<https://coingeek.com/calvin-ayre-2020-is-bitcoins-year-of-enterprise-adoption-kick-ass-utility/>

The inherent scalability, technology, and utility. In fact, he is so lucky to have acquired a stake in (nChain) this early on while they're still a private company and not taking any investment from people who try to throw it their way.

The reason why I am not going to shill anymore is because I am finally at peace and sound at mind. BSV has already won in all technical aspects. If BSV fails, then the whole entire crypto market should rightfully collapse as well. BSV should absorb everything once the veil is finally lifted. Don't you think it's quite ridiculous for "HODLnaut" to be named the MOST INFLUENTIAL in 2019 by CoinDesk? He only got recognition because Craig is suing him for libel. Yet all these hive-mind, echo chamber, MSM-influenced people hopped on his bandwagon to protect him for some strange, I cannot even tell you or explain why the fk, reason.

BSV is just another shitcoin, that plays with the idea, that it will be THE Bitcoin, instead of the real BTC.

have you even read the bitcoin whitepaper? If BSV follows the original protocol, the op_codes that allow for big number calculations, gives miners the original authority as mentioned to create their own prices and rates for processing txns (natural competition in the market will ultimately lead to cheapest prices for everyone) and everything else in the original whitepaper, then how is it NOT THE Bitcoin?

I feel generous. I'll you and everyone else one more knowledge bomb. This image below is the ultimate proof that Greg Maxwell and his "blockstream" totally hijacked the Bitcoin project by placing a hard block size cap. Bitcoin Core (BTC) is INDEED the altcoin that they saw was going to be created by Greg 7 years ago. BSV is the crypto market's final solution and last hope.

(Jan 5, 2020 05:22 AM)DrSpicyHot Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) have you even read the bitcoin whitepaper? No. And won't.

I'm a trader, and what is important for me that is the masses of user's, and the price.

There was several BTC 'copy', that changed small and little things too, but not a single one was succeed. BCH is the only that can reach something bigger in the relation to the market cap.

Yes BSV is also the 9th yet, but will it last? It mostly depends on the price and profitability.

Yet no crypto currency is widely adopted as a currency, but for trading, so while this is the scenario I don't think the whitepaper matters much.

I hope you'll earn on your move, but I won't follow you, instead take long position on BTC.

"How can you not watch hours of videos and not become a believer?"

Because I have no attention for anything deemed as "the popular view" anymore. I can't force myself to watch any tv shows or any series. All I watch are short videos on YouTube about random shit. For this guy to fascinate and interest me this much shows that he is the next big deal.

Yes, CSW is Satoshi. We shall see. The entirety of 2020 stands to be a huge year. It will be the truest tell after Genesis is released. I feel like BSV is valued right now where ETH was when it was early days.

1. First of all it was not Jan 1st 2020. It was supposedly to be in November 2019 the fatal flaw would be discovered. And yes, the flaw is out there. But simply put, it is destructive and bad practice to publicly expose a flaw. Greg Maxwell pointed out a potential double spend relay attack about removing P2SH script on the BSV network post-Genesis implementation set for Feb 4. 2020. Because he publicly disclosed this info on reddit, he missed out on receiving up to a $100k bug bounty had he privately disclosed with discretion to the BSV team. Instead, since he publicly disclosed it, he introduced more risk of dishonest miners attempting this sort of attack, thus causing increased risk of malicious attackers.

<https://coingeek.com/is-someone-going-to-steal-greg-maxwells-bsv/>

2. I'm sure he can pay his lawyers. He has a big house, sports cars, and shares in private companies. How can he be poor when he is the chief scientist at nChain, a company with 800+ blockchain patents where each patent costs $25k-$70k USD to be recognized globally.

<https://craigwright.net/blog/bitcoin-blockchain-tech/the-myth-of-forks/>

3. I think you'll receive more understanding after reading this. tldr: his family's money his choice. Nobody is asking Bill Gates or Mark Zuckerberg to move/spend billions of dollars to prove that they are billionaires even though they say they are.

<https://coingeek.com/craig-wright-sets-record-straight-again-on-tulip-trust/>

4. What was vitalik's argument again? All I'm aware of is when vitalik confronted Craig and said "Why did they invite you to this conference" or something along those lines years ago. Anyways, Vitalik's project just can't scale. And nChain even has the patent on "Smart Contracts" period, so some time in the future Ethereum will have to pay licensing fees to nChain should they wish to continue.

such a cope. This "shitcoin" has outperformed both BCH and BSV in nearly all regards and technical aspects apart from a few like hash power and mining profitability.

This has been public knowledge for a while now. Check out coin.dance/blocks

Bigger Daily Block Sizes

Higher Number of Daily Txns

Lower fees, with avg fee being $0.10 USD

Higher mining profitability than BCH. Will most likely eventually pass BTC this year.

The BSV network growth is parabolic.

Next time, get some facts/evidence before you say BCH or BTC is better.

Lastly, I'd highly suggest everyone taking a read at this

Yes, most of it is from Preev, WeatherSV, Moneybutton, etc. I'm aware. So what? The most important part is that the BSV network CAN handle this high number of transactions while maintaining close to instant confirmation and very low fees < 10 cents USD. When CryptoKitties launched on ETH, that one single app spammed the network so much that the ETH blockchain became clogged and congested which caused long tx times and high fees. We have yet to see that happen on BSV, which means it is the true solution for big businesses and enterprises due to the reliability and scalability.

Quote:Nobody is asking Bill Gates or Mark Zuckerberg to move/spend billions of dollars to prove

That's a bad argument. Gates and Zuckerberg are not claiming to be someone they are not. Also, no one is asking Wright to prove he is a billionaire. Nor is he asked to move Billions of dollars. Move $1 and that proves he has the key and would convince 99% of the crypto world he is who he claims to be.

Quote:Vitalik's project just can't scale. And nChain even has the patent on "Smart Contracts" period, so some time in the future Ethereum will have to pay licensing fees to nChain should they wish to continue.

I don't think you understand patent law. The patent is specific and does not mean they own all the intellectual rights to all Smart Contract usage. And even worse is if you support these horrendous blockchain patents at all. It's big corporate trying to take over. You should be against these patents.

<https://nchain.com/en/media/nchain-receives-first-patent-grant-blockchain-enforced-smart-contract-in-vention/>

He's scum. He really is. Unsure why you don't see that. The real Satoshi would not be making patents off his work.

Those transactions charts btw, are all faked transaction.

<https://unboundedcapital.com/blog/why-we-think-craig-wright-is-satoshi-and-why-that-matters>

Good read, mostly balanced. But it's utter bullshit.

Quote:The first is that CSW does not necessarily have an incentive to sign and prove his identity to those who see a signature as the evidence necessary to prove one's identity.

SURE HE DOES. He's in a court of law making the claim to prove he is Satoshi. The one thing that will prove it he doesn't do. That makes zero sense.

Quote:It is interesting to ask someone who is convinced CSW is a fraud what the incentive is for him to pretend to be Satoshi Nakamoto. A typical answer in my experience is something about his character; he's an egomaniac, a psychopath, or a pathological liar.

What about for power and money too? He's patent hungry. He could start making patents on Bitcoin from way back if he proves he's Satoshi or some court allows it. And maybe he is just plain crazy. In his mind maybe he thinks he is protecting Bitcoin or maybe because he was so involved early on that he deserves to be Satoshi and lead the industry. But there are lots of reasons one might make the false claim they are Satoshi.

Quote:The truth for most is that pretending to be Satoshi Nakamoto would be a hugely costly proposition.

So then why is he bothering at all to make the claim?

He's so full of shit. Reading this article just make me angry and how fucking crazy are you to believe this garbage?

You sir, are completely indoctrinated into believing he is Satoshi. Just like people who 100% believe that the government has aliens at Area51.

Just amazing people are believing this junk.

Dozens of members hopped on this thread to say that I was going to lose everything and that it was safer to just go to the casino and play roulette. They only made me double down in the end. I've found that inversing the hive mind mentality / echo chamber leads to truth, and is quite profitable in some instances.

My independent mind and thinking style has proven victorious, and I am now reaping what I sowed 3 months ago. This is only the beginning. The fact that these pumps have maintained in price and not crash back down reaffirms the legitimacy of BSV. $200 is peanuts. Almost NOBODY believes in BSV still apart from a few select individuals in the crypto space, and BSV gets close to no good news/publicity. Could you even imagine what will happen to the price then, if it gets even a single iota of good news instead of 24/7 disinformation and FUD?

There has been zero promotion or money spent on marketing from the BSV team. They also don't even have support from major exchanges like Binance and many other exchanges known for pumping and dumping. ALL that the BSV team talk about is scaling and building. You guys have no idea what is to come.

BSV is indeed rising very well. Still I don't place my bids on BSV, just because it doesn't feel good (I have to say I haven't done any research to BSV so that could be the case). So for me I will stick to Bitcoin.

All I can say is good luck and we will let the market decide ?

Believe it or not man these arguments we have over btc and cryptos has made me look into them more over the past year. Obviously btc has value in the fact that it's basically the currency we need to escape the central bank era and it's anon money transfers around the world but I personally wouldn't put all my eggs in that basket and I think that people need to remember what once gave the USD value, gold and silver. I think that btc will live long past the usd but how will you measure it's worth and compared to what? My guess is gold and silver.

I guess you are right it's not a ponzi scheme but literally anyone can make a crypto and that is worrisome.

The one huge difference is that BSV is now a multi billion dollar operation..

That came out of a multi billion dollar operation..

None of these projects have that kind of liquidity behind them..

BSV will come out on top of this year's miner halvening.

Block reward on BTC won't be profitable for most mining ops after this year's halvening. BSV's solution is to increase tx per block = increased tx reward for miners to compensate for block reward halvening. 1GB blocks coming = bigger tx fee.

Keep an eye on BSV in this year's miner halvening. A lot of big mining operations who have spent 7 figures on infrastructure aren't just going to simply shut shop and write off a loss - they will move onto the next most profitable chain, which is BSV (PoW and compatible with their current infrastructure).

FYI - deflationary currencies with vested organisations/institutions are bullish signals, if you've invested $100M into BSV ecosystem, you're not going to dump it and forego future earnings from the product - same incentive that prevents 51% attack.

Irrespective of personalities and disinformation from media - investigate the technology and make educated decisions based off that.

Block reward on BTC won't be profitable for most mining ops after this year's halvening. BSV's solution is to increase tx per block = increased tx reward for miners to compensate for block reward halvening. 1GB blocks coming = bigger tx fee.

There are so many other coins they could switch to if difficulty:reward ratio becomes garbage, why BSV?

PoW + ASIC compatibility based on same Bitcoin code (albeit a few modifications). Speak to the mining pools and let them tell you why.

Use your money as your mouth - place it in what you believe in. All crypto publications are bias/ill-informed, the same goes with the echo chambers on social media.

I do not day trade crypto so I cannot comment on shorts/longs based on speculation, etc. I am only interested in the technology.

I think there's a market for every niche, guess we'll see who wins this particular one.

I just highly doubt BTC will just die off after a halvening because it'll "be too hard"

I'm sure most of the pools are die hard BTC maximalists so its hard to imagine a scenario where they just switch over, especially due to the fact that if BTC skyrockets like everyone says it will, then mining will probably be even more profitable.

ViaBTC could literally perform a 51% attack if they wanted.

Yes someone who also thinks David Kleiman is Satoshi. Seems like a perfect move by Craig to do this now that David is out of the picture.

Also, OP do as you wish it's already converted to BSV so we shall see. I personally do have some holdings in BCH but majority is BTC.

Hey man, I'm open to having a discussion over this.

Send me a DM, I'm not here to troll :P

It's quite hilarious because even if you wanted to buy BSV, you couldn't even buy if you wanted to because it's not on Normie exchanges like NormieBase or Scammer CZ's Casino aka Binance, you dimwitted imbelices could never understand.

GET IN NOW!!! THE SHIP IS LEAVING @@@ BSV IS LEADING THE WAVE. IT HAS DECOUPLED FROM ALL OTHER CRYPTOS. BSV IS THE FINAL SOLUTION.

Is that why it was delisted from Binance? Because faketoshi's shitcoin was "the final solution"
Because I trust BSV more than Binance?

The fukc kinda backwards thinking is that Binance is a money-laundering machine. CZ is a criminal, and Binance's existence is illegal. If you can't see that, you're retarded
