Thread: Just emailed the CEO of warner bros...

Slim - November 6, 2019, 6:30 pm

We will see if she replies... I asked her to look into making Battle for Middle Earth III.... lol.

Hopefully it sparks something. I remember emailing the CEO of Niantic a few years ago to get spoofers unbanned and the next week the bans were announced to be lifted months out. I like to think I helped then and I like to think I can do something now...

May be wishful thinking. But I WANT BFME3.

Stakeholders have the most influence so my advice if you can afford multi millions is to buy at least a 25-30 percent majority stake in warner bros and the ceo will most likely listen to your ideas at that point.

It ain't a bad idea. But I seem to have forgotten where I keep my spare change of $1 million. It must be around here somewhere...

Natas - November 6, 2019, 6:41 pm

Bro you should get me the mcdonalds ceo email

How do you get the emails lol, I'm assuming they are public then?

Zero - November 6, 2019, 11:06 pm

LOL WHAT?

It sounds so much fun to email CEO's randomly asking for stuff
Some might actually reply

haksxsx - November 6, 2019, 11:21 pm

That must be something, how do you write emails,

Casual
Formal
Semi formal Designer
Which format?

Linux X - November 6, 2019, 11:49 pm

Lol you ask them this for real? ohmy....

Yeah, a screenshot would be a nice thing to be added.

Psilocybe - November 7, 2019, 2:49 am

Good for you if you really did shoot them an email, best of luck to you, friend.

Rsynced - November 7, 2019, 8:26 am

Did you ever get a response?

Bluffer - November 7, 2019, 12:23 pm

Does anybody think a CEO reads all their emails?

flavoral - November 7, 2019, 12:26 pm

Only thing I got from Warner is a contract deal getting cancelled last minute after weeks of negotiation :c

lava - November 7, 2019, 12:35 pm

Let us know if you get a response. i think its cant be likely though

Most actually do, some have PAs that flag material for them but yes, CEOs do read their emails as well as YouTubers - including pewdiepie and others. You'd be suprised.

I use to put IP logging links in the emails to see how long it would take them to read it after I sent it, not for any malicious purpose.

Cooligan - November 7, 2019, 4:30 pm

It'd be very interesting to see if you get a reply back, definitely keep us updated on this OP.

Mr. Robot Lol the IP logging links is actually a really good idea when it comes to that.

Master19 - November 9, 2019, 4:25 pm tell me which provider for the email hack plz. thanks

yes sir the email hack is you go to gmail.com

be very careful now you're on google servers

click "create account"

make account something secret

now you're in the google mainframe. be very ccareful or they will hack and send the fib to your house. one time i made a facebook account and obaba came over himself so very scary business

You'd be surprised at the number of responses you can get if you catch their interest w/ the title.
I've gotten a response from 6 venture capital firms & intel's CEO and CFO.

rarelandpupper - November 9, 2019, 7:42 pm

You really think a CEO of a multi billion / trillion $ company is gonna have time to read anything?

What a silly thing to say.

sadasdasdwads - November 10, 2019, 10:58 am

If CEOs truly read their emails, I'm sure you could exploit that and somehow get free stuff/benefit somehow off of that. Not really sure how, but I'd imagine it is possible.

Yeah. I am pretty sure you can't. But sure, try and exploit yourself some stuff. Sure..

Not anything big, but maybe a few free cheap products or shirts somehow. I remember people emailing universities and somehow getting lots of free apparel. Something similar to that I'd imagine is possible.
