Thread: Never Trust a Screenshot of Balance

Deployed - November 8, 2019, 11:06 am

Hello HackForums, Deployed Here

Never trust a screenshot of balance for proof. Ask the user to submit a mini screen-recording and ensure that they refresh the page while doing so. This video shows you exactly why not to trust and how easily this action is performed: https://youtu.be/i6_MSnHTZzA

I think most people know how inspect element works :P Also balances can be faked in videos too just use something with a public ledger like BTC ! Don't trust anyone's proof of balance, whether video or screenshot, ever.

Go to the page you're inspect elementing, right click, save as, save the html, edit it and "refresh the page" with your edited html. Profit???'

Jk, don't use this shit to scam, any body with more than 10iq will not fall for it.

However you will never be able to be sure, a simple chrome plugin can change the value on refresh instantly, hence refreshing is not really working either..

Can change their hosts, update it so that URL redirects to their local server.

Then the URL can be shown, even with SSL.

Literally never accept videos as proof of balance, or pictures.

Now you are talking. Yes proof of funds just isn't a valid measure of reliability so note that (@HackForums); and especially do not trust Screenshots. At least if they are going through a host redirect they have invested a little more work then inspect element lol

Good share, would've fell for this maybe ten years ago but it's 2019. Common sense.

This video gave me cancer.

A way to bypass this childish sh*t is to inject the page with javascript with this script I just made:

Code let newBalance = "9573,48 USD"
var items = document.querySelectorAll('[data-test]');
items.forEach(item => {
    if(item.dataset.test == "totalAvailableAmount") {
        item.innerText = newBalance;

items.forEach(item => {
    var spans = item.querySelectorAll("span");
    spans.forEach(span => {
        if(span.innerText.endsWith("USD") && span.style.float == "right") {
            span.innerText = newBalance;
});

i don't think you'll find many people on this forum who doesn't know what inspect element is haha.

rsx - December 25, 2019, 1:50 pm

If someone isn't aware of inspect element why are they even on the internet

Morpheus - December 25, 2019, 1:52 pm

When the OP discover the inspect element...

You can look at my sales thread, I always post a pic on IOS app's where things cant be faked.

Luca - December 31, 2019, 4:11 am

Isn't this common knowledge?

That's at least something, but even that doesn't mean it's real. For example, I receive a huge amounts of money from my clients which is money made from offering digital marketing services. And now I could publish an ebook on how to make money, and use that earned money as a proof for some shitty method. What I want to say is that there's no way to actually prove that the money actually came from that method that someone is selling. What I love the most is when they film a video where they throw around cash, that probably grandma gave him for his birthday. There are so many fake earnings here, especially in the ebooks section, but it's just not worth writing anything on their threads, anyone with a little bit of brain can understand that it is all bullshit, but there will always be people that are going to believe and buy their ebooks. Another cool thing is bragging rights section, my favorite part is when they take a photo of "their" new cars it's so funny. And I'm not even going to talk about all those "successful dropshippers" with millions in revenue, all of it being fake. From thousands of members here, you can't count five of them that are actually doing something for real and earning from that. Those people don't brag.

The tutorial is appreciated, although it is true that these things can be intuited by common sense, there will always be newbies who fall more easily into this type of scams, so it is worth warning them.
