Thread: Armada been charged. Years in prison?

LAboulhosn - November 13, 2019, 12:32 pm

as all you know he been charged for selling that rat and customers are now being raided so how many years does armada himself end up getting in prison?

yes take your best guess

Inversed - November 13, 2019, 12:34 pm

Im not sure who Armada is (guess im living in a cave), but indeed it's a fucked up situation.

My guess is would be something like 2-5 ?

Maybe 2 years.

Hi Luke,

Why do you feel he would get 0 days in jail? As if customers are being raided he would get some time at min a few years under a plea deal which he more then not would take.

You have to be able to prove that it's for research purposes.

There's also people doing research on coke, but last time I was stopped with coke on me they didn't fall for it that I was a researcher.

"they" are going after anyone no matter where you live if you decide to sell a rat. does not matter if for testing purposes or not. wouldnt be shocked for them to make an example out of armada and put him away for 5 years plus as you would think after nanocore and lumin both got took down for same thing he would of said fuck it but nope had to test his luck and now will pay the ultimate price. HF can only hope some day rats wont be allowed here anymore as not a single reason they should of ever been allowed. Admin should seriously rethink some of the things he allows on here as he can only use the argument "i just own site but not in charge of anything sold here" as you decide to allow it then he will be considered an accessory in these crimes as gives people an option on here to sell it. This does not seem right to me, and the reason is that we still have rats and crypters on HF, that have not been raided. Cyberseal, warzone, orion, WebMonitor and many other still exist. Have the rat products been decreased on the market due to raids/shut downs ? Yes, sure, but there is certainly a particular way in which they choose who they are going to go after, otherwise it makes no sense.

Regarding omni, I believe that from what I have seen he knows what he is doing, and if he thinks that the way he handles this is not going to hurt him, then myself I believe that he must be right.

(Nov 13, 2019 04:49 PM)Xamarin Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) This does not seem right to me, and the reason is that we still have rats and crypters on HF, that have not been raided. Cyberseal, warzone, orion, WebMonitor and many other still exist. Have the rat products been decreased on the market due to raids/shut downs ? Yes, sure, but there is certainly a particular way in which they choose who they are going to go after, otherwise it makes no sense.

Regarding omni, I believe that from what I have seen he knows what he is doing, and if he thinks that the way he handles this is not going to hurt him, then myself I believe that he must be right. yes havent yet. As more then not big enough to be on the radar. look at Luminosity. 700k in btc means he sold alot of subs. we dont know how many subs orcus sold but in due time we will. Those will come down in due time if they get on the radar. And omni did remove DDOS tools from being sold after mirai bot so dont doubt the same wont happen here unless after all he actually intent on helping feds capture people cause any normal person after 3 arrests (that im aware of) wouldn't continue to allow rats to be sold on site unless there was another motive. If he continues to allow it then thats on him but he cant really think the feds like him allowing a spot to sell rats to harm random victims. unless as said he is working with them.

Not to mention there are so many mitigating factors.

If it's proven beyond reasonable doubt that he did actually do that, how does the OP know if he didn't just nark on all his customers in exchange for a lighter sentence.

Many many things can happen here, cyber crime is a complex thing to prove and unless you have solid evidence, who really knows ..

Believe it or not, I personally don't agree with the outcome in this instance. I know Armada and was assisting him in making sure it was all above board legally.

Yes he used imagery and forums to advertise it and I did on numerous occasions tell him certain plugins shouldn't be included however a car with a speedometer that goes higher than the legal limit on any road in your country + advertising the top speed of your car isn't illegal.

The same goes for gun sales, you can advertise how powerful it is against a human being and use imagery related to it - but killing someone is illegal.

Dislike the outcome of this one, I understand why they did what they did but a lot of us use the forum completely legally and above board for educational purposes.

I see you there....

So before this account gets closed too... Ask someone in Wolf Pack to hook you up with my Discord so we can chat properly.

To the rest, inclusive of the redarted OP of this.

There are only 2 entities who know the truth to this matter.

Myself and the RCMP....

I know what was on those drive as they now likely do too...

- Mostly a bunch of crap, memes, drafts of tutorials, and whole whack of movies and tv shows.

What I know they will have paid interest to was the "Orcus Remote Business Folder" which contained our financials and sales reports, taxation paperwork and other viable items. But all that really proves was the software sold and the $ figures. - Zero, and mean absolutely zero user data was included in that aspect.

This paranoia about raiding the clients or customers?

Maaaaaannn, I been saying this for years, you CAN NOT TAKE OR TRUST KREBS WORD FOR A DAMN THING.

- Stop believing his bullshit, you literally fuels his ego and lie machine.

No ones getting raided because I was able to secure the database before anyone else accessed that specific server.

And only I know where the database got placed. Soo good bloody luck on that one.

Sure I didn't have "Proper OPSEC" as people KEEP pointing out. - I registered a flipping business, how exactly was I suppose to do that? ???

I spent a few hours watching this total sh1t show unfold earlier before deciding to actually make a reply.

But this has really gotten out of control....

So how about you all sit the f*ck down, read the actual RCMP news report. and go look up Canadian criminal code s.342.2(1)

- This would have rendered OPs original question moot if he knew how to use google and some common sense.

s.342.2(1) carries a maximum of 2 years prison time.

2x counts = 4 years for those cant use the calculator either. (And man that is surprising how many actually cant)

Skyline, I didnt say shit to them about you or anyone else.

- IN FACT the officer interrogating me seemed more focused on me giving a technical course as to how a DNS actually worked. (????) ? , To which degree I finally got pissed told him its not job to educate him how to do his job or charge me and get bent...

So perhaps before you all go running your mouthes, learn your fawking facts first, and stop trying to play lawyer. Jebus...

To my now former customers, you will be fine unless you were dumb enough to get yourself flagged from your OWN activities with the software Cough Mykindos Cough - Honestly still dunno who that dude is to this day...

Bluffer - November 15, 2019, 4:04 pm

When considering how long Armada will get in jail if any at all, you should look at Canadian law and how our justice system works.

If you look what he's been charged with, It's possible that all will happen is he has to give up his computer for destruction and that's it.

Yes seriously.

In reality, the maximum sentence he can get for each charge is 2 years. So at worst for him he's spending 4 years in jail, with being released on "good time" he's looking at 2 years or less.

A lot of people in Canada complain that our justice system is not harsh enough, I think the sentence Armada gets will depend on how much attention it gets. If Krebs is the only one talking about it come his trial, can expect a lenient sentence. If main stream news picks it up in Canada, can expect them to try making an example of him. There is other factors like if he cooperates (personally I don't think it's good for him to brag that only he knows where the database with customer info is) and also pressure from the Americans.

If on the other hand, some how he is extradicted to the US, he could see at least 5-10 years in prison.

Obviously if he wants those 2 years in jail he snitched.

Well perhaps pay attention to actual fact instead of fear mongering and teenage internet lawyers lol
Maybe I wouldn't then.

I had a job as well, Orcus was intended as extra income for a specific purpose.

Club Fed.

Free accommodations, food and activities.

Can't be that bad right?

Anyways this crime is classified as a "White collar crime" in Canada, meaning I will likely serve my time if any in a minimum security prison.

And to say the least, Minimum is almost like a resort compared to actual Prison.

Honestly, Prisons the least of my concerns...

Lets lay this out for people like OP as simply as possible.

I established Orcus Technologies as a method to save extra income for a down payment towards a house, condo or something viable.

After Krebs initial first article, TD Bank contacted my then current employer and pressured them to get rid of me.

Being TD was a massive contract they gave me a severance package and sent me on my way. - I was given a severance package instead of being straight up fired because Orcus had nothing to do with my existing job, and had no impact to my employer, other than being pressured by one of their largest contracts.

This lead to unemployment for a few months, which added a lot of stress to our relationship. However, was able to rebound and got another job.

The stress of the attention of Orcus did not alleviate though.

Summer of 2018 our relationship finally had a break down which lead to a massive fight about cleaning the apartment up of all things. Which ultimately ended up in the Police being called, I was subsequently charged for Assault. Childrens Services was also called due to the Police concerns about the apartment. (Reason for the entire argument)

Our son was apprehended and put into foster care and my girl was told she could not return to the apartment, she had to go to a shelter for a few days until accommodations were worked out for her and our son.

I in turn ended up homeless living in a tent...

Fast forward a few months, I established a new residence, better job.

Through the start of this year, stuff seemed to be settling down, until March when the RCMP raided my apartment and the legal fiasco with Orcus actually started.

Jump forward another couple months to this summer that just passed, I was Once again charged by the police for Breaching my conditions because my girl and me were trying to work stuff out ourselves because the court system was taking forever (1 year already in the courts at this point).

Jump ahead another month, My father passes away, the Closest family member I had. Upon returning home from my leave taking care of my ailing father, I was told my job position had been filled cause I was unable to give an ETA to my fathers death (?)...

So since August I have been trying to pickup work shifts anywhere I can in the meantime, which to say the least has been less than helpful working 1-2 days if that a week.

Then comes the final nail on the head and the RCMP officially charge me.

So to recap:

I suffer from Chronic Anxiety, Depression and Insomnia since I left the Military Services a decade ago.

I have no immediate family to communicate with. My father passed away, My mother and me have a rocky relationship, and my brother and me will just knock each other out on sight.

My friends as much as they try to chill as much as possible are very busy with work and family themselves.

I am legally not allowed to even be in contact with my Girl or kids.

I am fighting just to get shifts for work, to just cover my basic rent.

I am living in a 10x10 room, that does not even have a window.

I am facing 7, yes, 7 charges now...

I have a beautiful little baby girl who is now 3 months old and I am going to miss the most important years of her life because of all of this.

I am isolated and alone, with a mountain of problems that just seemingly keep piling up.

So, now ask yourself one question.

Why the hell would I even bother telling you all of this?

Because frankly, I got nothing left to loose here.

Perhaps this story of truth will open some peoples eyes to the true consequences of actions. I always knew getting charged was a possibility, I weighed the risks before we launched the software.

Nowhere did I expect it to lead to this kind of domino effect in my life affecting my personal relationships, employment, housing, and mental health.

No word of a lie, I think about suicide about 10x a day....
Still not sure why I havent back flipped off a building yet.... ?

So go ahead, talk your shit about me, and whatever the hell you want to do.
Cause frankly it just doesnt fucking matter anymore.

This is what people should remember. It's a sad story alright and not something you'd wish upon your worst enemy. But do note that breaking the law and knowing the risks that were connected to it is a risk you were willing to take at the time. The family matters is something entirely different that just coincides with the charges. You probably already knew you were gonna get charged the minute you started the company, or at least had it in the back of your mind.

It's not the first time and it definitely won't be the last time. If you want to start a business and do things like develop or sell software you better make sure your stuff is all within the boundaries of the law, especially when it comes to remote desktop applications. Agencies all around the world are looking for people just like that. Anything you say that can be linked to malicious intent, you bet your ass they'll use it against you. Anything you do to help malicious usage, you bet your ass they'll use that. Anything you wrote to employees and customers, you bet your ass they'll look over those things. OpSec is or should be your number one priority no matter how safe you think you are. Or better yet, don't get involved in the malware or grey hat business and do things the nice way.

The thing that's probably gonna mess you up for life is the fact that it's all public. Everyone knows who you are, just a quick google search and you'll be forever linked to the person who made or sold tools that could be used to spy on little girls. That's the stuff that will block you from getting decent and well paying jobs so even if the charges don't go through, you'll be forced to work with very little pay or once again start your own company. I'd suggest starting your own company, because that way you can at least make it or break it on your own and make the best of it.

By the way, a judge will not care about anxiety issues, family issues or any other nonsense that doesn't have anything to do with the charges you're facing so you better make sure you have the proper defenses in place. Why? Because everyone is anxious, everyone has family issues and everyone is dealing with something in their life. The law doesn't care about any of that. Now if you were schizophrenic on the other hand, you could have said it was all Mr Hyde's fault.

Judge:

Quote:Did you help customer x install RAT software on unwilling victim y?

You:

Quote:Yes but I have anxiety, family issues and needed money

Judge:

Quote:You said yes? Thanks for admitting the crime. Jail time for you, kthxbye next!

Really, judges are cold motherfuckers and I, too, can speak from experience. But again man, at your/our age? Getting into a mess like that? That's just... stupid. sorry, but it is.

Guess it's time for you to either break down and never to be heard of again or to make something of your life while you still can. Hell, I'd probably start a malware removal service to show how good you can be, but it's too late for that now.. Should have done that months ago when they raided you. At the very least you could have released a removal tool for your own malware in case people got infected (if you did, good on you, I'm not up to date on you and your endeavors nor do I know you).

looking for people just like that. Anything you say that can be linked to malicious intent, you bet your ass they'll use it against you. Anything you do to help malicious usage, you bet your ass they'll use that. Anything you wrote to employees and customers, you bet your ass they'll look over those things. OpSec is or should be your number one priority no matter how safe you think you are. Or better yet, don't get involved in the malware or grey hat business and do things the nice way.

The thing that's probably gonna mess you up for life is the fact that it's all public. Everyone knows who you are, just a quick google search and you'll be forever linked to the person who made or sold tools that could be used to spy on little girls. That's the stuff that will block you from getting decent and well paying jobs so even if the charges don't go through, you'll be forced to work with very little pay or once again start your own company. I'd suggest starting your own company, because that way you can at least make it or break it on your own and make the best of it.

By the way, a judge will not care about anxiety issues, family issues or any other nonsense that doesn't have anything to do with the charges you're facing so you better make sure you have the proper defenses in place. Why? Because everyone is anxious, everyone has family issues and everyone is dealing with something in their life. The law doesn't care about any of that. Now if you were schizophrenic on the other hand, you could have said it was all Mr Hyde's fault.

Shrugs

I spent 3 months dealing with the legalities, even having phone conferences with the same damn Cyber crime division that ultimately charged me.

Lawyers, the Authorities, everyone I spoke to and detailed the exact scope of the project and software, I was told no one saw a single problem legal wise, if I had not gotten that green light I never would have went ahead with any of this...

But people like you dont want to hear the logical aspects to the background of all of this, your just all having a laugh cause it "finally" happened.

So go have fun... Again, IDGAF anymore...

no we laughing cause you trying to blame lawyers and authorities. no one believes the shit you spewing. ya im sure the authorities said 'ya man sell a tool that can gain access other pcs as we all for it and behind you 100 percent"

You didnt check with a single person as no one is gonna ask the popo before selling a crime tool as anyone with a brain cell already knows it against the law.

just admit you got greedy and knew it would sell here as you WERE WELL AWARE what tool was being used for otherwise you wouldnt of had to tell users "we will suspend you if not used for testing" You decide to play with fire and got burned so now its time for you to fess up to the feds "yes rat out all your little buddies" and serve your punishment. then when it done email omni and im sure you can come back and be a spokesperson for all the morons here that want to sell rat tools and make them think twice.

(Nov 16, 2019 06:41 PM)Catra Wrote: CITE Honestly, Prisons the least of my concerns...

Lets lay this out for people like OP as simply as possible.

I established Orcus Technologies as a method to save extra income for a down payment towards a house, condo or something viable.

After Krebs initial first article, TD Bank contacted my then current employer and pressured them to get rid of me.

Being TD was a massive contract they gave me a severance package and sent me on my way. - I was given a severance package instead of being straight up fired because Orcus had nothing to do with my existing job, and had no impact to my employer, other than being pressured by one of their largest contracts.

This lead to unemployment for a few months, which added a lot of stress to our relationship.

However, was able to rebound and got another job.

The stress of the attention of Orcus did not alleviate though.

Summer of 2018 our relationship finally had a break down which lead to a massive fight about cleaning the apartment up of all things. Which ultimately ended up in the Police being called, I was subsequently charged for Assault. Childrens Services was also called due to the Police concerns about the apartment. (Reason for the entire argument)

Our son was apprehended and put into foster care and my girl was told she could not return to the apartment, she had to go to a shelter for a few days until accommodations were worked out for her and our son.

I in turn ended up homeless living in a tent...

Fast forward a few months, I established a new residence, better job.

Through the start of this year, stuff seemed to be settling down, until March when the RCMP raided my apartment and the legal fiasco with Orcus actually started.

Jump forward another couple months to this summer that just passed, I was Once again charged by the police for Breaching my conditions because my girl and me were trying to work stuff out ourselves because the court system was taking forever (1 year already in the courts at this point).

Jump ahead another month, My father passes away, the Closest family member I had.

Upon returning home from my leave taking care of my ailing father, I was told my job position had been filled cause I was unable to give an ETA to my fathers death (?)...

So since August I have been trying to pickup work shifts anywhere I can in the meantime, which to say the least has been less than helpful working 1-2 days if that a week.

Then comes the final nail on the head and the RCMP officially charge me.

So to recap:

I suffer from Chronic Anxiety, Depression and Insomnia since I left the Military Services a decade ago.

My friends as much as they try to chill as much as possible are very busy with work and family themselves.

I am legally not allowed to even be in contact with my Girl or kids.

I am fighting just to get shifts for work, to just cover my basic rent.

I am living in a 10x10 room, that does not even have a window.

I am facing 7, yes, 7 charges now...

I have a beautiful little baby girl who is now 3 months old and I am going to miss the most important years of her life because of all of this.

I am isolated and alone, with a mountain of problems that just seemingly keep piling up.

So, now ask yourself one question.

Why the hell would I even bother telling you all of this?

Perhaps this story of truth will open some peoples eyes to the true consequences of actions. I always knew getting charged was a possibility, I weighed the risks before we launched the software.

Nowhere did I expect it to lead to this kind of domino effect in my life affecting my personal relationships, employment, housing, and mental health.

No word of a lie, I think about suicide about 10x a day....

Still not sure why I havent back flipped off a building yet.... ?

So go ahead, talk your Clay Davis about me, and whatever the hell you want to do.

Cause frankly it just doesnt fugging matter anymore.

Well, some could say that this is your just desert for designing malicious software, It's a shame really because you could have marketed your product for use in a legitimate sector such as services, education, government, corporate or another type of organization/institution.

I mean I don't want to sound like a dick but your software HAS caused people who are invisible to you right now to suffer, on a human level I have some sympathy for you but not a whole lot really because you've simply projected your problems through your own software and that itself is the culmination of your own ignorance.

Also, stop feeling sorry for yourself it's your daughter who's now going to suffer. Get your shit together.

I am not feeling sorry for myself, nor did I make that post for any sort of sympathy.

I spent a good 15 mins after typing that up debating whether to post or not.

It is my hopes, someone on here contemplating releasing the next Botnet, RAT or whatever will think twice before they go ruining their own life like I have done to myself. Nothing more.

Its to me to deal with the shit storm I brought upon myself now.

Take a page from my book, Prison time and your freedom are not the only things you can loose in something like this. Shit I never even expected could even be remotely possible have happened. That is my lesson learned from all of this, and now I am paying the price well worse than what any Judge could throw at me.

As well as possibly the worst form of "a piece of shit" there could be. How could you (even jokingly) encourage someone to repeat the same actions that caused him to deal with these consequences in the first place? Smh.
