I am still a little confused on Nand vs. NVMe and which my laptop is capable of running. It also has a sata drive, so I may just upgrade that.

I'll be totally honest, if you live in Canada, CanadaComputers has some really fantastic deals. including $100 off the Asus ROG Strix 2070 Super, ~$250 off the 9700k/compatible mobo combo. They also have $40 off some fantastic DDR4 RAM from Corsair. They're the best for most hardware deals. There's also a pretty good deal on a 24.5" 144hz 1080p monitor from Memory Express. Unfortunately it's out of stock online... also, Amazon.ca sucks for Black Friday for hardware parts xD. Don't bother.

I can't really test, because I live within Canada. I don't see why you can't purchase from the USA or any other country. However, one of two things will likely happen:

1. You will pay through the nose for shipping
2. They just won't ship.

For me, shipping was very cheap or free in some cases.

A very good point, I swear when you are trying to find something you actual need you can never find a deal, but when your not looking they always seem to be on sale... wtf, It's mental.

Tbh I think the best deals are after Christmas. Like, people usually buy tons of shit on blackfriday or cybermonday especially for Christmas, but after that all stores got end of the year stock to get rid off so they actually make the best deals lol.

If I do need something I'll probably get it but won't force myself to buy something just because of the "deals"

Fair enough, from my experience, this is the best time of the year for electronics though. I used to always order a phone on Cyber Monday because you could find some deals where you'd get like 80% off if you purchased on Cyber Monday during certain hours.

Gonna be honest, really like that mousepad. The mousepad I have is a really old Steelseries Fnatic Mousepad that I got for like $5 from a friend (unopened). I've been using that hahaha. Kind of need to replace it as I've had to turn it around because the place where the mouse is, is wearing out. I'm Yep, I already purchased one :). Just waiting for it to be shipped now. One thing I don't like is that in the picture, they made it look monochrome. After doing some searches and watching a couple videos, it's brownish. Now ... my desk is wood, so it works perfectly and actually I think looks better.

Just don't like the practice :).
