CH00k - December 3, 2019, 4:37 am

Here, no matter what you do, a swat threw into your house and break your door. If they want to.

I've never seen an action where they calmly knock and talk to you. They just rush in, for example if they got an call "wife abuse" you get your doors broken down and you can't even do nothing about it.

If you are drug dealer, boom, doors down, on the floor, mask on your face so you can't see anything. (In-case you are mafia).

This also happens for stuff like vandalism or when you are for example aggressive to others. etc etc.

Or when you are cyber criminal too, like they don't knock, they immediately broke your doors.

I've never seen search warrant like "Open up, we want to talk with Agents". Here always Swat it seems when it comes to that.

Opinions?

edit: somet1mes they knock, for example if you are loud during the night, that's about it anyway. Its still feeling weird to me guys

Please stop watching Narcos and drugs/mafia related shows, movies and series.

They always mask people who they arrest even if you aren't from the mafia. It's for their own safety or if the 'agent' was involved in the undercover action to hide his identity for safety reasons.

I seen it happen in real life and you're screwed when they come for you. They didn't come for me but from someone I know, turned out it was a false alert. He 'looked like the middle aged man' they were looking for. I am not joking, they shot him, arrested him and let him free a couple of days later turning out it was an 'honest mistake' and that comes from a group of authorised people that should be protecting you.. again, I'm not lying about this stuff.

OP, you're making me cringe. You talk like you need to live in an action movie, while in real life you seem to miss a few things to be really happy without acting like Die-Hard movie stars. Work on your grind, do whatever you have to do, but don't worry about the swat or police. They'll do whatever they want, whenever they want and have the 'law' above them to help them out in case they make a mistake.

A police shooting someone is an 'honest mistake' while a citizen shooting someone is called 'attempt to murder'. Think about that. ?

That's exactly how is it.

I don't watch any movies or series.

They threw bomb / tear-gas whatever in and rush with guns... Those videos are from the Police Channel on youtube. I'm not lying.

They do this, so if he works for mafia or whatever, so he won't get killed. That was their reason.

I mean, it's on YouTube. So are other terrifying videos, yet it doesn't mean it's normal or only for the 'extreme' mafia, gangsters, or whatever. The police is taking more and more of your freedom until you have to ask for permission to go to the bathroom.

I'm just wondering why you're posting things you noticed on YouTube? Does it fascinate you, terrify you or why?

I've been "raided" by police more times than I can count. Never once have they knocked the door down, even when the house was empty. Everytime they would knock and wait. Then once in turn they would turn the place over, but not really damage much. I guess that's the difference between the UK and USA lol.

Dunno why..... But I feel like you've never been involved in a raid where they broke down your doors.

They aren't going to just talk to you because they believe you've seriously broken the law.

My first question is what country are you from?

Swat shouldn't be coming to your house for a domestic abuse call?

Swat stands for Special

Weapons

And

Tactics

meaning they're only used for in special circumstances, However I do not know your country or whats going on with your police department.

but no i've never had that happen.

Im from Europe. But not the west.
Ok look, if someone calls usually not, they check the situation and maybe knock.

But if you report the person as (shooting from balcony, being aggressive) i've seen this video on their channel, they bust in. Reason (We can't wait and risk).

I don't know what's defined as "special circumstances" but that depends. Can be anything.

Usually the cops doesn't care though but when they care or it has something to do with the united states, it's bad.

Nate - December 4, 2019, 2:10 pm

Well if swat gets called its more of a serious crime, then having just officers sent to your house.

gore - December 4, 2019, 4:45 pm

SWAT are not normal police officers. Police officers have to announce themselves and have probable cause to break your door down (screaming heard inside, for example).

SWAT already have the search warrant, they don't have to ask nicely for you to come to the door. They usually are there to get someone for a serious crime (murder, drug trafficking, etc) and the person they're getting usually is not going to calmly come to the door, lol. They'll either run or try to destroy crucial evidence before someone reaches them, hence why they break doors down.
Element of surprise.

yes that's right, my point is that they almost never knock like "hey we want to talk" but bust in. If the crime is not serious they don't do nothing.

All they cops ever really do here is knock first. Don't even make entry if no one answers unless they have probable cause.
SWAT don't need to knock, they're there for a reason. And it usually is a serious crime.

Criminality is low.
No questions are asked, they scream "POLICE OPEN THE DOOR" and rush in. No questions asked if someone is in here or no, they will simply search the house and everything.

Usually this happens for example with drug dealers. That's the most bad crime here. Nobody really kills people here.

The Search Warrant is their legal authority to enter and search even by force.

Quote:I've been "raided" by police more times than I can count. Never once have the knocked the door down, even when the house was empty. Everytime they would knock and wait. They knock here too. If there is a threat of violence like they know guns or drugs are in the house they will surely storm the place.

Quote:SWAT are not normal police officers.

SWAT teams are made up of regular police normally. Just not a lot for SWAT to do day to day. They suit up for special circumstances. To be part of SWAT you have to get certified and trained for the tactics they use. But often these are the same cops who patrol as well.

They shot him in his hand, yes. I didn't hear if he got any compensation, but I assume he sure got his money out of it.

That been said, it's a very personal case further and I rather don't discuss it out of respect of him. It's just too bad to see that the Police, a government funded organisation, which should protect us, to hurt us in such a way without really knowing if it was necessary to do so.

We'll end up in a police / military feared world if we aren't being more careful.

Look, there was similar situation that has happened, a person was shooting with gun out of balcony. He didn't shot anyone, there was no evidence but the neighbours have called about him shooting out of balcony and that he often screams home (maybe to his wife).

They want in and busted in the doors, the gun was held legally but yeah.

There was someone in the comments saying "why would they do this for such thing?" and someone has answered " because they don't wanna risk failing the action, maybe he was about to do something, it has to be quick, he could do something meanwhile they leave".

For domestic abuse or screaming after night time, usually city cops will come and check out the situation. If you won't calm down after like 2-3 warnings, you'll be arrested.

Slim - December 14, 2019, 4:40 pm

Well that's why it's called SWAT'ing. The goal is to catch you in the middle of an act but most the time they end up catching you in the middle of streaming. Lol.
