Go to the police if your rights are violated.

Don't reply to this kind of people, it's highly risky

Good luck OP

If you can't go to the police I means that you are the bad person in this story. You reap what you sow.

By the way even if you find someone who is able to delete the video, there is probably a backup if the guy who manages the website is not a totally dumbass.

Police is the best option, I'm out of this thread

By performing malicious hacks, not only do you risk getting yourself in jail you'll also have a criminal record which will prevent you from finding a decent job. You should report any illegal content using the rights that are available to you. As such, you absolutely need to go to the police if you or your rights have been violated. They will perform the proper procedures to get the content removed and you can possibly receive compensation for any damages that you might have suffered. Go talk to a lawyer first.

Don't be an idiot and get yourself in jail because someone put a naked picture of you online. That's not the right way to go about this.
