Thread: Are you talk-active or thought-active

JustDevyThing - January 15, 2020, 2:34 pm

I'm not talk-active. I was talk-active, but I was feeling like I'm focusing on wrong things. Discussing with people basically engraves a little bit of their world in your brain.

the more you talk with people, the less unique you are, and the less space in your head you have for unique ideas, thoughts and so on are you talk active?

I don't speak as much as I think. I'm always thinking. It's a curse a lot of the time. lol tru man talking is kind of beta because you dont benefit on it (unless you do)

I don't talk to anyone but my family... so I'm very unique.

I'd say i'm think active and would guess the majority on this forum are going to say the similar. Internet forums have a particular demographic lol

Do you monitor your every thought? Or do you allow yourself to think negative/weird things?

I am being watched by God, and my mind is being read via heartbeat science by the government.

I'm not a troll.

With coffee or any high energy I develop, all of that kind of shuts off and I live in the moment.

When I was younger I used to think that everyone could read my mind.

Yeah being watched by God is something I don't really think of or keep in mind while thinking.

The government is busy with other things. Maybe if I lived in China or something, but US is too busy worrying about money and terrorist attacks.

lol bro gov and god doesnt care about u, gov cause youre not in china and cause youre not snowden, god becuz obviously he doesnt exist but even if he DID exist then he wouldnt care about u as there are too many humans and probably your not in the most interesting ones

I mean some people can benefit on conversation

Thrift - January 15, 2020, 3:25 pm

Depends who I am talking to, friends is definitely just whatever first comes to my head.

With respectable individuals, definitely plenty of thoughts on the correct thing to say.

Couldn't say it better than this. But doesn't it feel good sometimes to just sit and think. No words, no sound, just you and your thoughts?

V?rt - January 16, 2020, 5:47 am

It depends on the context of the conversation if I'm talking to someone or a group. Sometimes I'll just sit and listen, and sometimes I'll speak up and say what I'm thinking hayesh - January 16, 2020, 7:02 am

Thought active,I dont usually speak that much unless im telling a joke

Yes! But I see things coming before others do so I come off like a weirdo sometimes. lol

That is a gift. Train it and use it for the right things in life.

When an idea, situation or scenario is popping up in your head, randomly, you can assume it's clairvoyance. I think? Unsure about the term.

Something like previewing the life you are about to have or other people around you. Trust me, you should trust your instinct and gift.

Do not, under any circumstances accept the "weirdo" title that people put on you. You have a gift, which you should never patronise or ignore due to the close minded opinions of others.

It's not fun to know what's about to happen, yet you can't always be sure if it's your paranoia brain or really an image of the about-to-happen scenario, yet it is possible to train it.
