Thread: It's Not Just Traffic

Have you ever walked into a McDonald's and smelled french fries?

You didn't really want them but the smell made you think about it. Maybe you bought some or maybe you didn't. But the object was to get french fries on your mind. They did it on purpose and they sell a lot of french fries to people that didn't even want to buy them before smelling them.

They understand what I'm about to tell you - You can't just rely on "unsaturated" traffic or sites filled with buyers. They don't look for all of the french fry buyers. They try to convert those that might consider buying some french fries.

This isn't 5 years ago when there were few girls selling nudes. Today you have strippers, pornstars, escorts, models, college students and stay at home moms. Where there was AIM and Yahoo chat, there's now kik, Snapchat, Skype, Instagram, OnlyFans and countless other apps and social media sites. The competition is everywhere.

That means you need to get better. You need to know how to sell. You need to know how to find those pressure points and hit them. You need to learn how to turn the skeptic into a buyer instead of just looking for buyers. You'll waste a lot of time just looking for buyers.

There are still good threads here and some members that actually know what they are talking about. And you can always learn how to sell on Youtube.

Just stop looking for "unsaturated" traffic and start looking for better skills.

You made me think of dan lok, the charlatan dude who got rich selling overpriced courses. Thing is you don't sell, you only contribute a lot and you made a lot of point on your threads or posts.

Every word is on point. As I always said, the most important thing is you SE skills.

Like him or not, Dan is a hell of a salesman. A crook but still a hell of a salesman. I've seen some of his videos and I admit to adapting some of what he says to ewhoring.

Trident i would really love to hear your point of view on those guys who only wants a meeting. How do i make them change their mind when they are saying that they don't look for online stuff. Thanks.

"I only meet with guys that I trust. You could be a serial killer or something. Let's build a relationship online first and then we can think about meeting up".

If you're going to do this, you shouldn't try to sell content. You want to sell companionship. And you want them to "help" you in exchange for your companionship. It's the sugar daddy model that requires a lot of work before the big payoff like an airline ticket. I would start with small things like Starbucks or Sephora giftcards that I could flip to women and move up to the bigger ticket items.

I understand what you are saying, but how can i switch from the normal day to day talking to the part where i ask for money? I just ask them something like "Hey babe could you PayPal me for my uber and lunch"?

"I just had the worst day. I broke one of my nails that I just got done yesterday. I ran over a pothole and I think I might need to get my car fixed and then they got my order wrong at Chipotle and I didn't notice until I got home. Maybe you can help me feel better?"

Most of that starts from the beginning. I know someone that's a sugar baby and she starts of by saying she is "underemployed and barely getting by". That allows her to ask for things and she usually has a long believable story to help her out.

But i guess you gotta sort someone the possible sugar daddies from the guys that aren't so rich. How do i know when i should ask directly for money for premium and when i should build a connection with them without bringing the selling part into discussion. Also the potential sugar daddies will see my stories regarding that.

Takes experience. I would get on twitter and watch how the pros (Strippers, escorts, camgirls) do it.

Ewhoring is just saturated

No, it isn't.

Nowhere close to being saturated.

Sex is the oldest selling product on Earth.

It's just as saturated as it always has been, it's just more and more kids are thinking they can jump on the bandwagon and become a master E-Whore within a hour or two. Taking time to sharpen up and perfect your SE skills and persevering in days where you don't make nothing at all is what sets apart the crap e-whores to the pros. When your E-Whoring for a sport to try get as many sales as possible in a day, that's where you will succeed.

As Trident said it has almost nothing to do with your traffic either which is what most others waste they're time concentrating on.
