Thread: Create password lists / Dehash passwords - Easy tutorial.

Mr. Robot - January 20, 2020, 1:20 am

So I absolutely love this site. (To be clear I spent like $200 or so for this thread to test it out for you guys at its limits)

Escrow for hashes, i'll dumb it down for those of you learning.

<http://hashes.com/>

Step 1.

Upload hash.

Step 2.

Deposit funds.

Step 3.

Offer a price of your deposited funds per hash.

Step 3.

Cancel it at any time or leave it up till someone solves it.

Once it has been verified, they will be paid and you will get your plaintext.

They also offer the ability to mass search for hashes they have stored in their precomputed DB. I thought I was downloading a file with only MD5 and had 300,000 credits to use ($150 for 1,000,000 credits) ($75 for 100,000 credits)

I downloaded a list from hashkiller - one of their main "test your wordlist threads" which said "612k MD5 hashes" - I ran that through with my 300k credits which if they were all public they would be 1 credit per.

The totals however before I ran out of credits:

Total lines: 612,389

Lines Processed: 189,750

Valid finds: 146,082

Not found/No charge: 43,668

So if I didn't run out of credits - it would be around 23.85% -

however if we take into account I ran out of credits... it was averaging a whopping 76.98% success rate. Which is already way higher than what anybody reported on the thread for the testing. (Average was 24% on the full file - we were already at that with less than 1/3rd done)

If I can do it again, what i'll do is run it through a basic wordlist (english dict plus some rules) then run it through the site to get you guys the results but at this stage, i'd HIGHLY recommend.

Here's a small sample of what it cracked (MD5 Salt and variants)

Got a thread coming in a few hours probably on how to use the site to make money too.

genesiseher - January 20, 2020, 1:26 am

lol few days ago you called it a scam
