

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Is there a way to appeal warnings?

SIM-2090815 - January 26, 2020, 10:45 am

I recently received a warning and had my posting/PMs restricted until now. I was wondering if there is any type of appeal process? Anyway, for now, I will leave my appeal in the spoiler below.

Spoiler (Click to View)

I made a thread of which I was looking for a cheaper way to get the UFC 246 PPV. I had full intention of paying and not pirating it however an individual posted a reply with a link to a pirated stream of it. I know where I could have got pirated streams from If I wanted to pirate it but I didn't and wasn't looking for pirated streams. I can back this up as I did infact purchase the event and have proof that I did with an email reciept.

I was looking if anyone had already purchased it and I could pay half and they would let me use their account. I was wondering if people had accounts for BT Sport Box Office/ESPN+ that I would be able to buy (i don't think this is against the rules as people already sell BT Sport/DAZN etc).

I have now received a 50% warning due to this for disallowed blackhat activities. I have never had a warning in my 6 years on this site and understand that my thread could have seemed like I was potentially asking for illegal streams as I didn't specify as I did above what I was actually intending on buying. Just wondering if someone could take a second look at the thread and maybe take the alternative perspective.

Many thanks.
-Dispaced

Deal - January 26, 2020, 10:46 am

It's a warning on a forum. Get over it.

Lrrr - January 26, 2020, 10:51 am

Technically speaking you could try to appeal it thru Omni, but that would be a pretty slippery road to try and walk down. If I were you i'd take the warning and call it a day.

Eagle 95 - January 26, 2020, 10:51 am

PM a staff member that issued the warning. There's no need for a thread.