Those who are into PA can clearly see we are at heavy resistance, the growth in this last pump was more of a short squeeze then actual natural growth you can see my target by the rubbish arrow I drew

This is a very LQ explanation why its gonna go down, I don't wanna influence anyone, I just wanna be able to show proof I called this shit

Kill Joy - February 2, 2020, 6:28 pm

Wow! Great information. Where did you get it? Is this leaked information from a premium signals group?

Swip3r - February 2, 2020, 7:09 pm

lol we've blown past all the "tops" being called think we'll blow past this one too.

Shelob - February 2, 2020, 7:20 pm

What? 6k my ass!

I will smash things if it happens

Flash ? - February 3, 2020, 12:00 am

First of all, we only tested 9.6k for once and btc didnt shit so bad, we just bounced off the support in that drop. i think its gonna consolidate for a bit and retry the 9.6k retest.
well i shorted at 9.6 yesterday if it goes down i am fine anyway

DNA - February 3, 2020, 12:25 am

I don't think this is the case OP.

It'll push through for a bit more yet, maybe 1-2k aud before another price drop just reffrence material not proper analysis posted, not gonna leak my edge

Enni Riverra - February 3, 2020, 6:14 am

I also think we won't go much higher than this for now. Maybe test 9.6k and then back to 5-6k region eventually. This however would get invalidated if we get a break & closure above 10.1k on daily TF shreder - February 3, 2020, 7:41 am

Makes no sense for it to go to 5k, your TA can be invalidated with one buy order.

Guardians - February 3, 2020, 12:18 pm

It's going $10k+, easily.

Donald Trump Jr. - February 3, 2020, 12:23 pm

Its going to 10k then dropping back to 8 then shooting up again.

shippyship - February 3, 2020, 11:13 pm

This thread is a great example of why just making calls is fucking pointless if not downright dumb. If you're just clout chasing without shilling some paid group or method, what the fuck are you even doing?

Just trade the bloody thing instead of trying to look like Dr. Big Brain for nothing but ego. Trade it, then post your profits if you want something to really use to vouch your skills, otherwise it's just masturbation.

What I mean is that people didn't move their money as much when Tether didn't exist, now that it does people are going in and out of bitcoins with ease. Holding isn't a big thing anymore and the market supply is able to keep up with the demand because of this.

I really hope we do hit $20k, but realistically I can't honestly see it happening soon. $13-14k is a safe bet for now at least.

Tether was actually even used to manipulate the price in 2017 causing a bigger rally and hitting above 20k...

But yes tether is being used on a much larger scaled now.

Tyr - February 18, 2020, 9:03 am

Wow! I never would of expected this! /sarcasm

BTC will continue to fluctuate a similar way for many years, while still maintaining a fairly decent annual return ratio for investors in the next following years. The more digitalized the world becomes, you will inevitably see an influx in the amount of attention BTC will be grabbing by people globally. Blockchain will become easier to grasp for those less technologically gifted or older than older people who missed the wave and with the introduction of BTC ATM's? Forget about it. I'd be pouring as much money into BTC as I can (if you have the extra cash of course, you need to prioritize) and let it set for about 8 years.

Yes, it's volatile right now, and it is has been, but things are looking much more promising right now. As a part time investor IRL with stockbroker's as close friends and a long time investor with different currencies and friends who develop currency my biggest regret in life is not buying into BTC in 2012. Instead I thought it would be a good idea to utilize Liberty Reserve and stick with fiscal money and lost thousands of dollars because of those people.

There's that and also buying $500 worth of XRP 2 years ago like an idiot.

I guess that's life, learning from your mistakes.

It has/had a bad rep because their books weren't really accounting for how much money they were printing right?

Did that ever get resolved? Did they successfully get audited I actually don't know.

(Feb 18, 2020 02:16 PM)Fictional Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) If exchanges are replacing USD with USDT then I guess it did get resolved lol or at least people and companies seem to have moved on from these allegations.

Yet its volumes weren't as big as they are now therefore the market has way more supply than it had before. Tether is bad for BTC, Tether will just dig the hole deeper that makes cryptos into an investment asset than a peer-to-peer medium for transactions.

Isn't that kind of contradicting IF tether actually has enough money to back up their printing of tether?

What would be the difference between people dumping FIAT for BTC than people dumping USDT for BTC?

If its the same exact supply and tether is backed 1:1 that doesn't really work.

If we stay above the 290b total market cap I don't think we'll see a dip, I think we just saw whatever dip you were referring to :p

But we are exactly at 290.4b at the time of this posting so anything can happen.

(Feb 18, 2020 03:38 PM)Fictional Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Cause dumping BTC for FIAT is harder than dumping it for USDT, what else? There is no normal FIAT regulation when transferring between BTC -> USDT, this is the main reason we are seeing a bigger dump of BTC for USDT.

No but that is irrelevant to the question I'm asking you.. Tether is backed by the USD 1:1 correct?

So to buy tether you must have BTC/USD/Anything that is paired with tether, correct?

Why would using USDT to dump/pump bitcoin be substantially "stronger" than using USD? They're both the same value, correct?

When you say "the market has way more supply than it had before" I'm imagining that more people are obviously trading USD/USDT or USDT/BTC in general.. right?

If there's so much more volume than there was when we pumped to ATH, why can't we do it yet? What I'm trying to get it, is I don't think tether played such a huge role as everyone swears it did.

Numbers speak.

(Feb 19, 2020 01:20 PM)Fictional Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Tether is inherently bad for the crypto ecosystem and will never be considered as a legitimate stablecoin by me atleast, the coin is centralized and have been found to create coins out of thin air to help Bitfinex survive.

Yet, it plays a big role in how cryptoassets are traded these days we can't lie to ourselves that it doesn't affect the prices either. I really don't like the idea of bitcoins being an asset, it is supposed to be used as a medium for transactions. Sadly, volatility doesn't help its case. Stablecoins is a solution to it, but tether isn't really.

The problem we're having is that the only coins that are possible to withstand evil nodes are BITCOINS and ETHEREUM, no other COINS IN THE WHOLE CRYPTOMARKET can withstand evil nodes as they are inherently so small compared to BTC and ETH. This is a huge problem for a decentralized stablecoin. That people are willing to trade between altcoins and invest in them when they have such a fundamental flaw where a single person can control 60% of the nodes to do a rollback of the entire blockchain, as we saw it demonstrated in Bitcoin SV.

You can read about the correlation of BTC/USDT price here:

<https://www.ccn.com/tethers-growing-market-cap-is-ultra-bullish-bitcoin/>

Never said it doesn't affect the prices, I said it doesn't affect is as much.

This is all under the presumption that Tether has had their books audited and have been declared legit (I don't know if they have)

But if they have, I don't see the difference between using USD or USDT to buy Bitcoin.

Alot of exchanges don't allow FIAT transfers yet, I know Bittrex just started using it a few months ago and before that everyone was trading BTC - > USDT and vice versa in case of a dip etc.

Everything else you said is kinda irrelevant to the point I'm trying to make, Tether isn't that big of an issue IF they've successfully been audited and can actually back up how much tether they print (Feb 19, 2020 04:20 PM)Fictional Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) There is a big difference and that is REGULATION.

What are you 16 years old? Maybe you don't need to think about regulations when all you're transferring is a measly $100, but for big exchanges and people with money it is important. People can use Tether instead of cashing out. Tether is a big issue cause its centralised and have proven to not be a trusted authority.

"In what countries and states does Tether have limited functionality?

Tether is committed to operating in a secure and transparent way, while adhering to all government compliance and regulations. This includes the regulations and economic sanctions that prohibit transactions from persons and entities connected to certain high-risk jurisdictions.

Persons domiciled or resident in the following jurisdictions are prohibited from using the Tether platform.

Cuba; Democratic People's Republic of Korea (North Korea); Iran; Pakistan; Syria; the Government of Venezuela; and Crimea. Verified Users' access to the Tether platform will be restricted while they are in these restricted jurisdictions.

U.S. persons are also restricted from using the Tether platform unless they are Eligible Contract Participants ("ECP") pursuant to U.S. law."

Do you just speak without looking into anything you're saying? I'm not even arguing the legalities of stablecoins nor the regulation aspect, WHY DOES TETHER VOLUME MEAN SO MUCH MORE THAN USD VOLUME IF ITS 1:1 IS WHAT IM TRYING TO ASK YOU got it?

Oh so you factored in the effects of this virus and its possible pandemic-wide infection, okay lol.

I still doubt you maintained your short, while I am happily DCA all the way down and will continue to do so :)

I mean to be fair I wouldn't have said $18k was the top if it was actually $20k.

Anyways regardless of that, people that buy during the dips usually prosper very well, and if you actually maintained your short then congrats.

Its Gemini btw, their instant ACH feature is nice to buy crypto on the spot (up to $500)

Wish I would've bought more eth at $~90
