Thread: Any tips on learning German?

Citoa - February 9, 2020, 2:31 pm

Do you guys have any tips on learning German?

Do you know of any videos, sites, apps that can help?

And also what are your recommendations for German TV series, music and films?

44krieger - February 9, 2020, 2:39 pm

I'm on the go right now and don't have much time to post.

Maybe I'll update later.

"Der Tatortreiniger" is an amazing TV series in my opinion. Give it a try.

If you have any specific grammar question or something similar feel free to DM me.

Honestly I don't really have any experience learning new languages but I heard that the Rosetta Stone language learning software can help or just try a good strategy.

depends on what your goal is. if you want to read it, learn grammar, if you want to speak it, get a tutor.

Oh I also wanna learn the German language as well, pretty interesting :D

Elitas - September 23, 2020, 8:20 am

Duolingo is probably okay to understand the basics. Watching TV/News in German would also help.
Why do you want to learn German? I find it somewhat useful but having fluent English is much more valuable to me, since everyone in Germany knows English anyway (for the most part).

Blockonome - September 23, 2020, 8:48 am

Duolingo is a great app for learning, I am currently learning Russian with it!

Free Kurdistan - September 23, 2020, 1:41 pm

Duolingo and movies. Always test yourself and make yourself remember it. Learn the grammar, try to type in whole sentences and get feedback from it.

Starks - September 24, 2020, 6:44 am

I suggest that you use your first language to learn German, but avoid language interference. Also, learn nouns with their genders and stop direct translation. Get yourself a good German-English dictionary.

junkie - September 24, 2020, 6:50 am

I wouldn't learn german only if you really need it, every time someone talks to me in german I get ww2 flashbacks. English and spanish is more important.
