Thread: Let's talk business. Do you have a business or got ideas/plans?

Perileos - February 14, 2020, 9:22 am

Hi.

I like to talk and learn about businesses so I love to hear if any of you have actual real life businesses.

Also I'm willing to give advice, support or whatever necessary for some people to launch their own ideas.

Currently I have two projects, a real estate project and some subscription based project.

What about ya'll?

Not sure if selling weed counts lol. I would get into window glazing if I didn't want to ruin my body. My parents owned a window installation company and I help my brother in-law install glass in window (glazing) for cash now and then which is like a gold mine lol.

Do you sell weed as a licensed "retailer"/shop?

Why don't you start for yourself with window installing?

I was looking for some land to buy to be able to start a business that I've dreamed of, but I think I'll be moving soon so I'll have to wait on that.

May I ask why specifically you need to purchase land to start your business? Is it agricultural?

Narzi - February 14, 2020, 9:51 am

In the midst of starting a digital software development agency ..

How is that going? Hope it goes smooth.

If you need any help regarding business development, let me know.

It's not agricultural, but it's things that require buildings.

Businesses are hard to start, but I really want to start one when I get older. Specifically for something programming related.

If you are comfortable with it, you can send me a private message and perhaps I can advise you. Usually companies do not start with purchasing land unless it's a FDI (foreign direct investment) and that requires a massive start up.

New companies usually rent out a building or space they need to operate.

In most majority of western nations it is relatively easy to start a (legal) business. However, everything that comes after that is difficult.

If you have some good cocktail recipes you wish to share, I am happy to receive some. ?

Are you from an area that isn't that densely populated? If not, I would reckon it would be easy to find space to wrap and tune cars. Same for a coffee cafe! What is holding you back my man?

Nice, I'm a fan of the car shop.. there's a user here who can't remember his name atm but is doing quite well buying cars at auction and flipping them in his shop with his friends. Might be worth having a discussion with him sometime

I have no interest in stealing other people's ideas as I am working on my own.

As in games that have been fixed? If so that's highly illegal. ?

I'm in the process of setting up a web security business that specifically helps small, local businesses with an online store to protect against basic hacks.

I have a friend helping me who is a cyber security professional but it is primarily a way of practicing my skills ethically and legally whilst making a little bit of money on the side :)

There are some matches which are fixed, the ones I know about are football/soccer related. I didn't know these to be fixed before hand but when you see the match you just know it is.

Usually there is a call on the darkweb for it, same for insider info trading.

Currently part owner of an electrical contracting business. It's an family owned business, owned and operated since 04-05. Been working full time for about 9 years or so. Best part, return business. You know you are doing something right when 99% of our clients return to us for years and years.

There's many contractors around here that are just in and out. They don't give shit about anything else except the money. Very seldom do you see people take pride in their work these days..
