So this is just a thought provoking question. Which one would you rather have?

pkdarn - February 20, 2020, 7:51 pm

50k. I'm perfectly fine being alone, maybe just keep a cat/dog around for company :)

If we are talking about someone who's going to be my ride or die until old age takes us then I would go with the soulmate.

What's a soulmate? Doesn't even exist. I will take the $50k.

oRequiem - February 20, 2020, 10:23 pm

I'll go with soul mate mainly because it's not fun being completely alone.
Money doesn't buy happiness so no $50k for me even though it would be a huge help for what I'm going for in life.
But no point if I can't share my life with someone else.

Narzi - February 20, 2020, 10:30 pm

50K is really not a lot of money.

Already found my soulmate, but if not then I'd definitely pick that.

SIM-2875347 - February 20, 2020, 10:44 pm

Soulmate, 50k is really not THAT much money. I think i'd have a lot easier of a time getting 50k than getting a soulmate.

50k lol...

The old saying goes, disregard females , acquire currency

WalterE - February 21, 2020, 1:34 am

50k is only going to last you for a few months to a year maximum while a soulmate is going to bring you joy for decades to come.

Assuming a soulmate is real (which I genuinely believe it isn't as there's more then 1 compatible person on this earth for everyone) I'd be with you and choose soulmate.

50K really isn't as much as people would make it out to be. About a 1 year salary of a regular job. If soulmates exist, I'd gladly trade that in for a lifetime of happiness :P

Exactly what I was thinking

I guess a lot of people here are still fairly young so relationships probably don't have the same appeal.

No, you are a beautiful Soul! Just think like this;

A Soulmate is perfect, but you "find" them doesn't mean they "find" you too.

Perhaps (s)he will pass upon the opportunity to date you, while all your friends are enjoying the 50,000. Think smart my man and love will find you! ??

I think that might be it yes. 14 year old me would've probably taken the money as well but I suppose through the years I've gained some perspective.

Side question, what's up with your popularity? I've not seen something that low since the days of -Nyx

It's a statement I guess. Everyone was saying it was meaningless yet people would still complain if you negged them and were still begging for rep. So I embraced the negatives.

I also used to be an asshole. The first few hundred was legitimate from going through and negging everyone who was doing rep4rep. Then it just kinda caught on and everyone gave me negative instead of positive.

Also means I'm the only person that's hit four digits in both positive and negative rep. And it was kinda a fun challenge and it's a good way to stand out.

Still waiting on the red Apple award though. Or maybe a rotten apple.

passCODE - February 21, 2020, 4:47 am

I already met my soulmate so I will take 50k and leave.

Jokes aside, if I were asked this, I'd choose soulmate. I think if you find someone who's perfect for you, it means that person will also motivate you, be there for you and you will help each other. Having that part of the life all sorted out, you can focus on business and I'm pretty sure you have higher chances of succeeding. 50k is not that big amount that can drastically change your life so picking something like a soulmate would be a better choice here, in my opinion.

Invest 50k, and make 100k. You wouldn't be alone, you can fuck random chicks.

Vossen - February 21, 2020, 6:15 am

Soulmate. Incredibly hard to find with more than 7 billion people. $50k is literally nothing, you can make that easily. You'll burn through that in 4 years max, so not worth it.

J4mmy - February 21, 2020, 6:29 am

Considering the epic raise in the divorce statistics, I would probably just take the $50k and make myself happy for a year or something. On the other hand, if it was promised when finding a soulmate that it will last for life then heck yeah I'd take a soulmate because no money can ever replace the fun I could have with my soulmate!

Well yeah but you don't need a soulmate to settle down, 99% of people never find theirs, you just work out the differences and live.

?ystem - February 21, 2020, 8:26 am

I'd rather find my soulmate over the $50,000, mainly because coming across a legitimate soulmate is oftentimes a once in a lifetime event(If that!), whereas you can always work really hard to earn money.

Thats the plan, no way gamble, thats a safe way to loose, its more about playing smart and investing into material products your own life, with time love will come and that love will hopefully be your soul mate, and in the end you'll still have that 50k a little more or a little lesss but youd be 50k richer than you are now.. just saying but yes gambling is a no no. ahahaha
