

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: What do you think of Medicine Doctors?

Dr. Einyel - February 21, 2020, 11:24 am

Hey. I'm from Venezuela and people for some reason use to respect Doctors over here. I don't know if it is a 3th world country thing of it happens around the world. What do people usually think about Medicine Doctors there where you live? Are they at the same level as all the other professionals/working people (as it should be), or do they represent something close to an authority?

Luca - February 21, 2020, 11:44 am

Here it's pretty much just like any other profession. Your knee starts hurting, you go to a doctor, he checks you out and helps you. That's it.

Dr. Einyel - February 21, 2020, 11:51 am

(Feb 21, 2020 12:44 PM)LukaNo007 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Here it's pretty much just like any other profession. Your knee starts hurting, you go to a doctor, he checks you out and helps you. That's it. As it should be. What country is it? USA?

Luca - February 21, 2020, 11:53 am

(Feb 21, 2020 12:51 PM)Dr. Einyel Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) As it should be. What country is it? USA? Croatia

passCODE - February 21, 2020, 11:59 am

If you're a family doctor then not a big deal, but if you're a popular surgeon or something, then it's a pretty big deal. Doctors should be respected since they spent half of their life studying and taking different specializations. You have a huge responsibility as a doctor and that's what I actually respect the most about them, staying calm while saving someone's life.

Vitani - February 21, 2020, 12:12 pm

It really depends on what kind of doctor you mean specifically. The run of the mill family doctor will know a little bit about every common thing, but as soon as it gets beyond something common they'll refer you to a doctor who specialises in the field. It can be a bit of a hassle I suppose but I do believe it's the best system.

Dr. Einyel - February 21, 2020, 12:43 pm

(Feb 21, 2020 12:59 PM)passCODE Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) If you're a family doctor then not a big deal, but if you're a popular surgeon or something, then it's a pretty big deal. Doctors should be respected since they spent half of their life studying and taking different specializations. You have a huge responsibility as a doctor and that's what I actually respect the most about them, staying calm while saving someone's life.

They study the same time and a good family doctor can prevent you to need a surgery in many many cases.

Stork - February 21, 2020, 1:01 pm

My neurologist seems pretty smart and seems to stop me from dying so I like her lol

passCODE - February 21, 2020, 1:19 pm

(Feb 21, 2020 01:43 PM)Dr. Einyel Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) They study the same time and a good family doctor can prevent you to need a surgery in many many cases.

In my country, they don't study the same time. Four years is the normal thing for both, and that's when family doctor's education stops, while the surgeon for example needs 4 more years (total of 8 years). I mean, I respect both of course, it's not easy.

Dr. Einyel - February 21, 2020, 1:23 pm

(Feb 21, 2020 02:19 PM)passCODE Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) In my country, they don't study the same time. Four years is the normal thing for both, and that's when family doctor's education stops, while the surgeon for example needs 4 more years (total of 8 years). I mean, I respect both of course, it's not easy.

I understand. Here in my city, it is 7 years for general doctor, and 3 more for general surgeon or family doctor. Also Medicine intern, for example.

Herbert - February 21, 2020, 1:29 pm in the country I'm currently residing at, they have a whole different mindset. They focus on treating something rather than curing it, because there is more money to be made long term, also due to health insurance being somewhat of a standard.

In my home country the doctors focus more on curing rather than treatment and their medicine proves more effective.

Slim - February 21, 2020, 2:31 pm

What kind of medicine? I don't respect doctors as a whole, but each doctor on a different level. Anyone can be a doctor. Most are dumb.

Yin Yang - February 21, 2020, 3:15 pm

I used to like them, but I think with insurance companies and their strict policies, you don't really get that 1v1 that you used to have with your doctor.

I'm barely in there for like 5 mins and that's it lol.

Snowwy - February 21, 2020, 3:39 pm

(Feb 21, 2020 12:44 PM)LukaNo007 Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Here it's pretty much just like any other profession. Your knee starts hurting, you go to a doctor, he checks you out and helps you. That's it. Same here in Aussie.

?ystem - February 21, 2020, 3:40 pm

It all depends, really, because there are so many of them that take their profession very serious and listen to patients. Whereas there's also the handful scattered about that will listen to you for a minute or two and write you a prescription so you get out and they can move on to the next patient, and the cycle continues. That's at least the way it is here, and we generally respect our doctor's orders in our later years, often rebelling in our younger.

Dr. Einyel - February 22, 2020, 7:47 am

(Feb 21, 2020 02:29 PM)Herbert Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) in the country I'm currently residing at, they have a whole different mindset. They focus on treating something rather than curing it, because there is more money to be made long term, also due to health insurance being somewhat of a standard.

In my home country the doctors focus more on curing rather than treatment and their medicine proves more effective.

It happens very often. Many doctors just cure symptom instead of illness. But not necessarily looking for more money, but just to work fast and easy. But we are told the whole college career to not do this.

(Feb 21, 2020 03:31 PM)Slim Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) What kind of medicine? I don't respect doctors as a whole, but each doctor on a different level. Anyone can be a doctor. Most are dumb. Most doctors are dumb because most people are dumb. They are just people.

(Feb 21, 2020 04:15 PM)Yin Yang Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I used to like them, but I think with insurance companies and their strict policies, you don't really get that 1v1 that you used to have with your doctor.

I'm barely in there for like 5 mins and that's it lol.

Wow. We expend around 30 min at least with every patient. And that is if we just need to talk. If we need to make some extra test it could last easily around 1 hour.

(Feb 21, 2020 04:40 PM)?ystem Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) It all depends, really, because there are so many of them that take their profession very serious and listen to patients. Whereas there's also the handful scattered about that will listen to you for a minute or two and write you a prescription so you get out and they can move on to the next patient, and the cycle continues. That's at least the way it is here, and we generally respect our doctor's orders in our later years, often rebelling in our younger. I understand. Yeah, it's pretty much the same over here.

device - February 22, 2020, 10:39 am

In France they are just workers like everybody else. Most of them are old and not up to date with some recent chronic illnesses or other new discoveries. GP's usually send you to see specialists if you don't have a cold.

de_g3ntl3m4n - February 22, 2020, 11:00 am

I think about those doctores that where those masks, those types of docters that you saw in the black plague or in world war, or even if you played assisns creed there was this one doctor or somebody you went to that had those long masks and stuff that is what i think about when i see a medicine doctor