Thread: Simple 404 Page - Dribbble Weekly Warmup

vyactor - March 2, 2020, 2:10 am

I've joined Dribbble a few days ago and also thought to do something each day to be more creative and obviously more productive.

Dribbble had a weekly warmup kind of thing so thought why not to give it a try.

Dribbble quote:

Quote:Listen, friends, there is nary an experience more flustering for an internet user than the message: Page not found. While broken or dead links can be a bummer for any web surfer, the experience needn't be an aesthetic wasteland. Heck, even here at Dribbble we make sure to let wayward browsers down easy.

So in that spirit, for this installment of the Weekly Warm-Up, your task is to design a creative 404 page for a website of your choice.

This #dribbbleweeklywarmup is speeding down the information superhighway, and runs until March 2—so get started on helping those users who have gotten lost!

404 Page Design:

I appreciate any comments.

The arrow on the "Go back" button should be facing backwards <, not forwards >. The design itself is clean but too simple imo.

looks like a chill type of design clean and simple but idk feel like you can possible use a better font

to be honest

Is this a joke/satire thread?

There is literally nothing unique about this. The font choice is terrible, especially since all that's on the page is some basic text.

Disgusting.

There was minimal effort put into it and was completed within half an hour. I've even stated on the thread title that it is supposed to be simple and I've never mentioned it to be unique.

Then you deserve to be shit on. If you don't put in work, and have no creativity or uniqueness, why are you posting in a rate my graphic section of a forum?

Here's your rating: Even if you took 5 seconds to make this, it's dogshit. It's not just the fact that it's more basic than the Karen gang at starbucks, disregarding the poor effort it isn't even good in any way. I really don't know why people like you post shit like this to be "rated". It's a fucking joke. It's even funnier that you think that not spending much time on it somehow makes up for how shit it is.

But the funniest of all is that you think 30 minutes for this pile of horseshit was "minimal effort".
