Pretty much impossible unless you have access to the targets system and can log what the user is typing. Or brute-force but that takes forever.

Oh ok i will learn the basics first to improve my skills. Long story short i paid for those hacker-for-hire service that i found on telegram, but i got scammed around $300. The person however, managed to hack into the account, he just wanted more money and refused to release the login details. so far he only asked me to download termux, then he asked for more money if i wanted to software files to access the account. The target account was a disused account, so one one's security got compromised. Does it mean channels like these @fbhacck are scams? This guy apparently charge USD $50 per account

I could give you tips and point you in the right direction and maybe teach you something. It'd be better if you have access to target's device, you will install a keylogger through a USB and you will get it done. You also said you know the basics but what exactly did you learn so far? Would you mind being more specific?

Otherwise there are other "social engineering techniques" but these methods will not assure you 100% results.

Well, basically i have learnt about phishing, and air crack-ng as well as cracking password (not very effective nowadays), other than that i am focused on defending against attacks. One of my friends school email got phished recently, thats why im curious about other methods

Is the xleet.to website legit or scam?
