That's crazy but not really needed in my opinion, even tho I wouldn't be sad if I got something like that haha. What for do you use that ridiculous speed?

I have 32Mbps download and 9Mbps upload.

Well basically i can do whatever i want without limiting myself. If you're just a casual gamer 1gigabit is overkill. But for me multitasking comes first, so i gotta do a lot of things at once where i'm required to download stuff without interruption

For the masses its unnecessary. Its not like they can run a server on a home connection, if their ISPs found out they'll be terminated or forced to pay for a business connection. The benefit everyone would feel is low latency and maybe download speeds depending on the drive they write to and connection type. To add damage people today add trash IOT devices or wire taping devices on their network on a cheap consumer router. Honestly I could be well with 500Mb down and low latency.

I have no problems with latency at all with my low speeds. I mean, I don't do anything spectacular online so I really don't need it. For web development and some graphic work I definitely don't need it, for browsing the internet, watching porn and youtube I don't need it, and for occasional download of a movie or tv show, I don't need it. Even if I wanted this speed that Dotexe has, I think none of the ISPs is offering it here in my country.

I have no idea, I've moved back with my parents. Back when I had my own place, I paid $60 for 300Mb down and 60 up. My dad is paying for fiber, it's advertised as 1Gb. Its roughly there depending on the day and test. Me personally I'd rather own the hardware than pay for ISP hardware, not sure if you can even own the hardware on a fiber connection. Luckily there's a solution, hybrid fiber with cable.

My modem paid itself off after 5 months. I'd rather have the choice to install open wrt on my own hardware or far into the future for a larger network pfsense. Can't control my parents network but at least I can have my own DNS sever/sink hole setup. Can't complain when you aren't paying.

They are the top coin, you can setup a VPN node on a box or a dozen boxes etc. I would go with them. Just could not remember which one I was thinking about. The coin is traded on coinbase. Great potential for someone with your internet speed.

EDIT: Not sure if OXT is doing nodes yet publicly.

Dope. - May 4, 2021, 9:59 am

Paying $150 a month for 1GB Cox Internet No fiber as its the only service available. Its consistent as far as download speed and I don't think it made a difference as far as ping goes but it surely helps for the months I'm downloading games/plugins/software onto various devices. I wish it was cheaper but it isn't. I'm probably going to go back to something more affordable as its not that essential unless I'm downloading lots of 4k content.

Anyone know where we can maximize our download usage? In the game SIMS there's a automated que system in which you can compile next actions synched for execution.

Looking to purchase code implemented into windows sort of like AHK (still learning/wanting to hire) to que potential downloads (Videos off websites) when I'm doing other tasks/overnight.

Anyone chime in for some bytes?
