Thread: \$1000-1500 USD Call

DNA - March 18, 2020, 2:05 pm

Yes I'm doing it and I'm prepared for your questions.

Today I saw an article and I am prepared to call it.

Global Recession Guaranteed

With the market only slightly recovered since the crash last week, I am prepared to call it.

In January I had predicted the market to get to $7000 AUD, it got as low as $6,754 before being pumped back up.

The call is $1,000-$1500 USD / $1,750-$2,600 AUD : 1 BTC by the 30-60 days.

Let's see how accurate I am this time around.

If so, I can see a lot of Americans wasting their Stimulus Cheques

sufficient - March 18, 2020, 2:06 pm

And do you suggest that $1000-1500 is the lowest point it gets to? And if so, do you believe it'll recover?

HACKED - March 18, 2020, 2:16 pm

I don't believe that BTC can reach that levels again. I don't know if it is gonna rise or drop further but your scenario seems impossible. In my opinion it could drop up to 2,5-3k per BTC which is still really difficult.

Saixi - March 18, 2020, 2:16 pm

The way things are going just now that might be a good call .. Nobody knows what's going to happen in the next few weeks/days.

If it did go that low perfect time to buy buy buy

Good luck on your prediction ?

You think it will go that low even with the halving?

I think it will take some time before the halving takes effect and in that time if a recession occurs, which some say it would almost definitely occur, then the markets would crash yet again and much more than before

anmolpokhrel - March 18, 2020, 8:24 pm

I don't know what to say .. Bitcoin a curse or a cure? People are quarantined ... they stay home. Netflix/Youtube /Social Media they are profited. but crypto is different in this case, its all about peoples personal money and trading online. There is only two situation .. either it booms or it dooms..... it depends . . but one thing for sure ... they will boom high or get doomed high.

Because of the inevitable recession which will cause the market to plunge further than it did. NASDAQ stocks also heavily affect Bitcoin for some reason, so it would be justified to say that during a recession, Bitcoin will plummet once again, and lower than before.

The 1k USD call is simply because it went lower than the predicted 7k AUD call last time. I firmly believe it will reach $1500 before we see the run on effects of the halving, possibly 3-6 months after the lowest point is reached

You can have a look yourself, it's information is public domain, time and time again I see that if NASDAQ is on the rise or slump, so is Bitcoin, so much so that I say they are correlated in some way, much more so than gold, the Dow, yen or any other fiat currency or commodity, only net stocks.

I think u are absolutely wrong. I'm not a BTC enthusiastic but the panic from coronavirus is over and a lot of people who can't go out are using BTC and are learning about it for online payments. Also It's unrealistic that u would call 1000-1500$ on the bitcoin price after the price got halved. I will give u 20$ if the BTC price decrease below 1500$. U can screenshot this.

Don't forget that Bitcoin was created for times like this. If we all used Bitcoin instead of cash right now, that would decrease the corona cases by 50%. But people forget the reason why Bitcoin was created and use it to make money .

Anyway , I respect your opinion . Have a great day buddy!

You can think what you want, that's what opinions are about but I don't believe this to be an unrealistic scenario at all, if a recession hit, the impact would be larger than the impact the Coronavirus fear had on the market.

We'll see what happens, but if it happens, I called it.

Guys, you dont understand, bitcoin might go at 1k, 1,5, its possible and what ? if it happens i would be the happiest guy ever.

Last week, the huge drop ever is not an aggressive sale like people who want to get rid of their bitcoin.

Its not the ones who did a buy & hold and went out.

Its just institutional traders, etc, who needed cash, all their cash to put it on risky assets.

If you go on tradingview and check the CME bitcoin future contracts, since 19 February the contract went from 8k to 4,5k in less than a month, divided by 2!!! so its a lot of cash, a lot of investment, retrieved for traders, a companies, an institutions, who needed it.

If the huge drop of last week would be an aggressive sale the price would be already higher than now as everyone would have already bought massively after this huge drop but its not the case, its not an aggressive sale, its just institutional that need money and will come back on bitcoin.

Guys, CAC40 lost 40% in less than a month, it never happened since the crash of 1929, and we dont even know if it will drop again lower.

Bitcoin shouldn't be so low currently it is because of the coronavirus.

im curious and want to see how it will grow up after the halving.

Rayner - March 21, 2020, 7:26 pm

The thing about the halving is that everyone knows it is coming so it won't rise as much as you think just because it has happened.

Absolutely correct, only when the miners stop mining, will the value rise but in this time before halving, it can get extremely volatile, hence my call.

If 5 institutional traders buy bitcoin right now, the bitcoin price will rise

If 5 institutional traders buy the same amount of bitcoin not right now but after the halving the bitcoin price will potentially move faster than before.

So yes, you're right but why investors and traders would not invest again on bitcoin when the price move faster ?

Bovril Coin - March 22, 2020, 9:33 am

"The panic from coronavirus is over"

It is far from over, it actually is just getting worse as the days go by. All I can say is it is only going to get worse from here as the days go by. Yes Bitcoin was created for times like this, but you should ask yourself this question, how many people look at bitcoin as a profit stream vs people who actually want to use bitcoin as a transaction processor for everyday life activity.

It won't be considered a safe haven and in fact would become more volatile in a recession. People would be investing in gold and oil, not cryptocurrency.

Miners always stop mining for a while after halving, that's where the supply and demand comes from.

Would you mine something that is worthless to do so?

Transaction fees will eventually be worth more than the block reward itself.
Basic economics mate.

Agreed.

The Australian government wouldn't give out 76 Billion dollars of assistance if the "panic is over", in fact, it's the start of a possible 6 months lockdown.

If ASX/Wall Street has taught us anything, volatility is both good and bad, don't be a fool and think it's all good, buying anything at anytime, because you'll get smacked down by the market fast with that attitude.

You're retarded kid* is what you meant.

Who's the kid?

Anyone born before the year 2000 knows this.

BTC is tougher than that, hopefully

I would invest some in a stable coin when it peaks before it drops again, we might see as high as 16,000-17,500 aud before it drops again and if a recession is declared, which is inevitable at this point, I do believe everyone will be dumping at the same time bringing it back to a value not seen in over a decade.

I'll make a $100 (AUD) wager (if that's not against the rules), that it will reach $1500 USD within 30-60 days of when I first posted this thread.

I'd put more on it, but it's a very low call that I was only just barely prepared to make.

To be fair, that is why I have such disdain for Donald Trump... It was like 80$ before he came to power ..

Send away, make sure it's public

Also I honestly think you would lose this wager simply because of this recession.

I know you may see it as easy money, but with the amount if countries on lockdown and the exponential rise of COVID-19, with almost 500,000 confirmed cases, this is only going to get worse. Whether it will affect Bitcoin like it did, is anybody's guess, but I have seen strong correlation between Nasdaq and BTC and firmly believe in the event of a recession, the economy will fall hard.

I don't think I will lose this wager due to the fact that you are right about it. The American economy cannot and will not, according to Trump and the COVID-19 Taskforce, stay locked down for too much longer. The economic impacts will be far more catastrophic than the total amount of lives lost to COVID-19 in America.

There is a pretty strong correlation. But if it was so strong, we would have seen a much bigger gain in crypto the past two days than what actually occurred. If you said this a year ago, I may not have taken you up on this offer.

this is my view:

- 1- BTC bottomed and on it's way for a new all time high
  - 2- BTC will fall again from here OR 7.3k - 8.3k MAX to 2.4/3k then start it's road to the New all time high
  - 3- BTC will raise to 10/14k Max then fall to 1k finding a new bottom.
- trade safe...

I'm sorry, I didn't realise you understood the implications of a virus from our world's socioeconomical standpoint, allow me to bow my head in your presence.

My call was not banking on COVID-19 at all, if you had have bothered to read my thread, my call was banking on the recession caused by the virus, which takes time, just like the halving.

You saw just this past two months, it went from 3.5 to 9k, it can just as easily still go just as low, if not lower than predicted.

In order for BTC to skyrocket as much as people hope, it must first be run into the ground.
This could happen tomorrow, this could happen in a month.

Big banks like JP Morgan and Goldman Sachs will try to drump the BTC price to buy some, this is for sure, I can provide evidence of that (Different white-papers and fear mongering through the news).

However I don't believe they will be able to crash it further than 3k, I don't see BTC price going below 3k EVER again.

Anyway, keep in mind that if you play the long game, and HODL your coin, you'll make LOTS of profit even if you buy at EVERY HIGH!

Dollar cost average is the name of the game, time in the market beats timing the market, and it's truer than ever with BTC & ETH.

You were banking on COVID-19, as it is the only variable to the recession. I saw BTC couldn't even break previous lows in a global panic with economic downturn and pandemic. That just makes BTC stronger than ever before.

I concur but my prediction has shifted to 7000-7500 being the lowest possible point in the next three months, my low call was based on the multiple factors that never came to fruition.

Sadly I missed the boat yet again, with 75% of my liquid net worth in USDT, which were setup at 3 different sell off prices, none of which were hit. Now I'm just waiting for a decent rebuy point, which we should see given that supply and demand won't kick in for a while yet.

I put my money where my mouth is for a reason, I was surprised it didn't occur prior to halving. It is always unpredictable, but we do our best to discern probable and improbable calls.

Feel free to send it to the address in my signature and we'll talk contracts once it's done. :)

Sadly I missed the boat yet again, with 75% of my liquid net worth in USDT, which were setup at 3 different sell off prices, none of which were hit. Now I'm just waiting for a decent rebuy point, which we should see given that supply and demand won't kick in for a while yet.

Ahh well, sometimes you call them right and other times not so much..

Yeap, a dip to ~$6900 is possible IMO

Not a problem, I'll hit you up.

Watching, waiting to rebuy right now. Hoping to see 8.5 shortly so I'm not out too much.

Will send wager after work today, gg though, I seriously thought it would have dropped off before the halving.

I'm not here to argue with you but my personal take on it $1000 - $1500 is a little bit extreme as people are going to want to offload there money from the banks into commodities or into something like btc and other crypto currencies. We will just have to wait and see! :)

Sorry OP did not realise this post was before the halving fair call but even still i think it would be extreme it would have to break major major support before breaking down to $1500.

0.0065 sent.

Feel free to send a contract if you want.

As unpredictable as it can be, we both knew it was on the table and so I was willing to call it, even though I knew it was a bold move, well played.

Edit: Also didn't notice your address until I went to pay my lost wager, very nice.

It's a shame I didn't even hit one of my calls.

Edit:

Now that this goal had failed to be reached and the wager cleared, the thread is re-closed.
