Thread: Season 2 of How Not to Summon a Demon Lord Announced!

Megane - April 8, 2020, 6:49 pm

A second season for How Not to Summon a Demon Lord has been announced and has been dubbed, "Isekai Maou to Shoukan Shoujo no Dorei Majutsu ?".

I enjoyed this anime very much. Despite being a very powerful character, Diablo was a funny and good character. Additionally, Shera and Rem were cute companions to have and I am excited to see what this trio will do in the next season. From the looks of the picture, it seems two more characters will possibly joining their team.

At the moment, there isn't that much info on the anime as this announcement was just made today, but feel free to discuss the previous season, as well as what you think to expect in season two!

Have you read the visual novel?

As I mentioned in my reply to your post on my Tower of God thread, people on MAL rate things in the weirdest way. Of course, everyone has their own opinions and I'm all for that, but some of the reasoning I see is ridiculous and silly.

For example, I've noticed a lot of people who strictly only watch hentai or ecchi rate everything a high 8-10. It just amazes me that they see pantsu shots or big boobs and instantly rate it a 10.

I can agree at times too much ecchi can get annoying, but if I know from reading the synopsis or from others that the anime has a tremendous amount of fanservice and I watch it anyway, it's my fault for even starting the series. The easiest way to avoid it is just not to watch it! But that's an issue if, as you said, anime like this has a nice plot and enjoyable story to follow along because you want to watch it!

I used to think the more ecchi the better, but that was when I first started out watching anime. Overtime once I found my taste of anime that I like, a few pantsu shots here and there aren't too bad and some nice thigh highs aren't bad (° ? °), but I'll just settle with watching hentai over ecchi.
